✻ Whilest these things were in doing, William Mettellan the yonger was sent ambassador into England, to salute the quæne of that realme (as the maner is) & to declare the good mind that the quéne of Scots bare vnto hir, & the desire that his mistresse had to haue peace and vnitie preserued betweene them. Besides all which, and manie other demands touching Scotland (which I suppresse for manie reasons, because (as Salomon saith) Cor regis inscrutabile, & the mysteries of princes gouernment are not to be laid open to common eies and eares) this ambassador deliuered letters to the quæne of England from the nobilitie of Scotland. In which there was a courteous remembrance of hir former fauor and of their good will. Requesting further that the quéene of England would shew a publike and priuat liking and friendship to their quéene, to the end that the quéene of Scots prouoked by hir benefits, might not onelie remaine stedfast in the amitie alreadie begun: but might also (if it were possible) be daillie more and more fast bound vnto hir: and they for their parts would not omit anie occasion with all good will and diligence to continue this amitie.

Fr. Thin. Buchan. lib. 17.

To which ambassador the quéene of England made no lesse honorable than wise answer: the effect whereof, because it concerneth matter of great importance, & is long and largelie alreadie set downe by Buchanan, in hir maiesties singular commendation to the whole world in the Latine tong, I thinke it not necessarie héere to repeat: and therefore I do purposelie omit the same, least I might séeme by flatterie to intrude my pen into the eloquent spéech of hir maiestie: and not being able to deliuer it with such grace as both she spake it, and Buchanan penneth it, I might dishonor hir, & ouerthrow my selfe, like vnto Phaeton. For as he, taking vpon him to rule the chariot of the sunne, was by his insufficiencie therefore consumed with the heat and glorie thereof; so should I in presuming with vnskill to pen the Buchan. li. 17.

The quéene of Scots had a bꝛother called John, a man deſirous of authoꝛitie, but yet not ſo ſeuere in mind as was James the other bꝛother. This John eaſilie perſuading himſelfe to obeie the quéene in all things, was the moꝛe déere vnto hir, and moſt fit foꝛ hir, deſirous (as ſaith Buchanan, but how trulie I know not) to confound all things. With this John (in abſence of the other bꝛother James) ſhe did conſult to hier a companie of ſouldiers to be about hir, the cauſe whereof was this. In the night there was a tumult oꝛ ſtur, as though the earle of Arran would, in the abſence of the nobilitie, ſecretlie ſet vpon the quæne, and by ſtrength haue laboꝛed to carie hir to his caſtell, which was fouretéene miles from thence. All which ſéemeth likely to be but a tale, either foꝛ the quéenes mind that was eſtranged from him, oꝛ foꝛ the immoderat loue which he bare vnto hir: both which were ſufficientlie knowen to the common people. Which tumult being ſpꝛed abꝛoad, theſe ſouldiers after they had all night ſcowꝛed the fields, riding vp and downe hither & thither, they ſhewed themſelues the nert day beforе the court gates, to the offenſe of ſome, and the ieſt of others.]

Fr. Thin. Buchanan lib. 17.

The ſunday beforе Shꝛouetueſdaie, being the eight day of Febꝛuarie (as ſome wꝛite) James Steward then pꝛioꝛ of ſaint Andꝛewes, and earle of Mar, baſe bꝛother to the quéene, was made earle of Murreie, [in place (as ſaith Buchanan) of the earledome of Mar, which belonged to John Areſkin] by the quéens ſpeciall gift, and was maꝛied the ſame day vnto Agnis Keith, daughter to the erle Marſhall, with great feaſts and triumphs, laſting thꝛée daies. ✲ In which maꝛiage he did ſo much exceed, that he greatlie offended the minds of his friends, and miniſtred matter to his enimies to ſpeake euill of him; and that the moꝛe vehementlie, becauſe he had beforе time in all his life behaued himſelfe far moꝛe temperatlie than he did at this time.]

The quéene of England deſirous to haue a méeting betwixt hir and the quéene of Scots hir coſine, ſent diuerſe meſſengers with letters, deſiring hir moſt inſtantlie to come to Yoꝛke, where ſhe would méet hir, to talke with hir of diuerſe matters, that might make to the confirmation of the amitie and friendſhip which nature had knit betwéene them, by coniunction and affinitie of bloud. And after conſultation had with hir councell, the quéene of Scots agréed thereto: and ſo they were appointed to méet at Yoꝛke in the moneth of Julie nert following. But when things were pꝛepared and put in a readineſſe foꝛ the iournie, the quéene of England ſent woꝛd to the quéene of Scots, that ſhe could not kéepe the appointment made foꝛ their méeting, deſiring hir to haue hir excuſed foꝛ that time. Which meſſage was accepted, and ſo the iournie ſtaied.

The quéene of England deſirous to ſpeake with the quéene of Scotland.

The méeting time was diſappointed.

Fr. Thin. Buchan. li. 17.

✲ Much about this time, oꝛ rather ſomewhat beforе, as in truth I ſuppoſe it was, James Hamilton being duke of Chatélerault, and father to the earle of Arran, firſt wꝛote to the quéene, then after went he vnto hir to ſaint Andꝛewes, and with manie pꝛaiers requeſted hir that ſhe would vpon ſufficient pledges deliuer to him the earle Bothwell, and Gawen Hamilton, but he could not obteine anie thing therein at hir hands. At what time alſo the quéene went to Dunbꝛeton (which Hamilton held ſince the time that he was gouernoꝛ) to demand the deliuerie of the ſame into hir hands, which was accoꝛdinglie deliuered vnto hir.] Shoꝛtlie after, the quéene of Scots toke hir iournie towards the noꝛth parts of Scotland, and ſet from Striueling in the moneth of Auguſt.

The quéene made hir pꝛogreſſe into the noꝛth parts of Scotland.

About this time it chanced that the loꝛd Ogiluie, and John Goꝛdon of Finnater, ſonne to the earle of Huntleie, met on the cauſeie of Edenburgh & fought, where (after manie blowes and ſtripes giuen and taken) the loꝛd Ogiluie and his companie were hurt. Wherefoꝛe John Goꝛdon was taken, & put in ward at the tolbuith of Edenburgh, out of which he eſcaped, after he had remained pꝛiſoner therein about twentie daies, and toke his waie noꝛthward: whereupon followed great trouble ſhoꝛtlie after to the houſe of Huntleie. The quéene accompanied with the earles of Argile, Murreie, and Hoꝛton, the loꝛd Erſkin, and others, paſſed foꝛwards in hir iournie towards the noꝛth part, and cauſed John Goꝛdon of Finnater to be ſummoned to apéere and anſwer the law at Aberden, foꝛ bꝛeaking pꝛiſon, and hurting the loꝛd Ogiluie. The quéene comming to the towne of Aberden, was honoꝛablie receiued with diuerſe oꝛations, and Latine enterludes, beforе the grammar ſchole and college.

✲ Theſe things thus done at Aberden, as the quéene determined to go further, ſhe was intreated by John Leſle a noble man, and followeꝛ of the Goꝛdons, to vouchſafe his houſe in hir waie, being 12 miles from the towne: to which ſhe granted, & went vnto the ſame. This place, becauſe it was no common place of reſoꝛt, was thought verie conuenient foꝛ the execution of the earle of Murreie, whoſe death was conſpired (as after ſhall apære.) Wherevpon Leſle, who was not ignoꝛant of this ſecret counſell, beſought the quæne that ſhe would not laie ſuch a note of infamie vpon him and his familie, that he ſhould ſeeme to haue betraied the chiefeſt bꝛother of the quéene, no euill man, and one that was not his enimie, whereby he might come vnto his death at his houſe. Wherevpon it then ceaſſed, and the nert night was alſo quietlie paſſed ouer at Kothimie, a towne of the Abernethians, becauſe the nert day the quéene was determined to go to Stꝛabogie.]

Fr. Thin. Buchanan lib. 17.

Wherevpon the earle of Huntleie, hauing beforе heard that his ſonne was thus ſummoned, aſſembled the pꝛincipall earles, loꝛds, baꝛons, and gentlemen of the noꝛth, who came with him to Aberden, to helpe his ſon at the law day appointed foꝛ his apéerance, which was in September. The earle came vnto the quéene himſelfe, and at length it was agreed, that his ſonne the ſaid John Goꝛdon ſhould returne to pꝛiſon againe in Striueling caſtell, there to remaine during the quéenes pleaſure. But he following the euill counſell of ſome yong heads that were with him, neither fulfilled the quéenes pleaſure, noꝛ his fathers appointment, but attempted to reuenge his extreme handling (as he toke it) vpon the earle of Murreie, whome he put moſt in blame foꝛ the rigoꝛ ſhewed againſt him, but his enterpꝛiſe toke not effect. Now the quéene aduertiſed of his diſobedience, went not to Stꝛabogie, notwithſtanding there was great pꝛeparation made foꝛ hir in that place, foꝛ the receiuing of hir and hir traine: but ſhe went vnto Balwanie, the earle of Athols place, and from thence to Kinlos, to Tarnewaie, and ſo came to Inuerneſſe, and there lodged.

Goꝛdon is commanded to Striueling caſtell.

He diſobeied.

In this meane while, the earle of Huntleie, purpoſing to attend on the quéene at Inuerneſſe, cauſed pꝛouiſion to be made in the caſtell foꝛ his lodging. The quéene ſuſpecting his dealing, leaſt this ſhould be done vpon ſome policie, commanded the kéepers of the caſtell to render the ſame to one of hir heralds: but it was not deliuered till the nert day, and theꝛefoꝛe the capteine of that caſtell called Alexander Goꝛdon, foꝛ refuſing to deliuer it, was hanged vpon the towne towne bꝛidge. The lorꝺ Goꝛꝺon & his bꝛother John Goꝛꝺon of Finnater came that night within a little ſpace diſtant from the towne of Inuerneſſe, which cauſed great feare in the towne, ſo that there was a diligent watch all that night. The earle of Huntleie being come to Kinloſſe, and hearing that the caſtell of Inuerneſſe was commanded to be giuen vp into the hands of an herald, ſent with all diligence to the kéepers, that they ſhould deliuer it, & returned himſelfe to Strabogie.

The quéene remained in Inuerneſſe the ſpace of foure oꝛ fiue daies, where the pꝛincipall capteine of the clanes of the countrie came to hir, and with a great companie [of the ancient Scots (as hath Buchanan) whereof the chiefe were the Fraiſers and Murreies, valiant families in thoſe parts] conueied hir to Spine, where ſhe was informed that the earle of Huntleie had gathered an armie to come againſt hir, and made their aſſemble at Spaie. Hérevpon, they toke with them all the artillerie ouer Spine, and caried the ſame in carts, and all other kind of munition, and paſſed foꝛward to Bamf that night. The earle of Huntleie all this while came not foꝛth of Strabogie. The quéene as ſhe paſſed foꝛward, rode to the place of Finnater, and there in hir owne pꝛeſence, cauſed the kéepers thereof to be charged to deliuer it, which they refuſed to doo. From Bamf the quéene rode to the lard of Geichtis place, called Geicht, and the next day there was great pꝛeparation foꝛ hir entrie into the new towne of Aberden. She lodged one night in the biſhops palace, and the next day ſhe was honoꝛablie receiued, and lodged in the pꝛouoſts houſe of the towne, where ſhe remained all the time of hir abode in Aberden.

After this, the lorꝺ John pꝛioꝛ of Coldingham, with diuerſe gentlemen, was ſent againſt the earle of Huntleie to Strabogie, but he was eſcaped beforꝛe they appꝛoched. The ladie Huntleie receiued them verie courteouſlie, and gaue them good interteinement, and ſo they returned. There was charge giuen to Louthian, Fife, Angus, Stratherne, the Merns, and to the ſhire of Aberden, to come to Aberden quarterlie, euerie countrie to remaine there fiftéene daies; and ſo they did, during the time of hir abiding there. The earle of Huntleie ſent his wife in meſſage to the quéene and councell, but ſhe was not admitted to come within a mile of them, but commanded to returne. After this, he ſent a meſſenger, offering to enter in ward till his cauſe might be tried by the whole nobilitie: but this was refuſed. In the meane time all the pꝛincipall of the Goꝛꝺons that were landed men, were charged to enter into ward. About the ſame time James Hepboꝛne earle of Bothwell, who (vpon diſpleaſure conceiued againſt him about a quarell betwixt him and the earle of Arrane, had béene committed to pꝛiſon in Eaſter wéeke laſt befoꝛe paſt) eſcaped out of Dauids towꝛer in Edenburgh at a window.

When the earle of Murreie was come to the ſide of a hill, from whence he might ſée all the marſhes about him, he incamped there in a ſlender oꝛder of battell. At length the armies met, at what time manie on the earle of Murreie his ſide did flée awaie, hauing befoꝛe giuen a ſigne to the enimie. But the earle Murreie, which ſaw there was no ſuccour in fléeing, ſtood to it valiantlie, called his men togither, ſet vpon the enimie, cauſed them (which befoꝛe followed his men fleeing awaie,) now to flie as faſt backe as they came foꝛward. Which change of foꝛtune when the traitoꝛs that befoꝛe fled did percetue, they came afreſh and purſued the Huntleies, and (to cleare them from the firſt fault) committed all the ſlaughter that was doone that daie.

There was killed of the part of Huntleie a hundꝛed and twentie, and a hundꝛed taken: but on the other ſide not one. Amongſt ſuch as were taken, was the earle Huntleie himſelfe, and his two ſons, John and Adam. But the father being old and ſhoꝛt bꝛeathed by reaſon of his groſſenes, was ſlaine betwéene the hands of ſuch as toke him, and the reſt were late in the night bꝛought to Aberden.] The quéene ſéemed ſoꝛie foꝛ the earles death. But in Nouember John Goꝛꝺon was beheaded in Aberden, and ſhoꝛtlie after the quéene returned ſouthwards, leauing foure commiſſioners in Aberden, the treaſuroꝛ, maiſter James Macgill, maiſter John Spens of Cundie, and the lard of Pettarrow, to compound foꝛ the eſchets of them that were in the field with the earle of Huntleie. Great ſummes of monie were taken and leuied of them foꝛ that treſpaſſe. ✲The earle Bothwell was commanded the firſt kalends of December by an herald to yéeld himſelfe againe to pꝛiſon, but becauſe he would not, he was declared a publike enimie.]

The lorꝺ Geoꝛge Goꝛꝺon, eldeſt ſonne to the earle of Huntleie, was taken by the duke of Chatelerault his father in law, at Cumernould, and bꝛought to Edenburgh, where he was put in the caſtell, and after by a iurie conuict, foꝛfalted, and condemned to die, and ſent to Dunbar caſtell, there to remaine in ward, where he continued till the yéere of God, 1565. ✲At this time was a monie mulct ſet vpon ſuch as did eat fleſh in the time of Lent. The ſetting foꝛth thereof was not ſo much foꝛ religion, as foꝛ publike commoditie, by the iudgement of Buchanan. The archbiſhop of ſaint Andꝛewes, becauſe (after an edict made therefoꝛe at the quéenes comming into Scotland) he did not abſteine from hearing and eating maſſe, was committed pꝛiſoner to the caſtell of Edenburgh, and the reſt that were found in ſuch actions were fined, with pꝛomiſe of a greater puniſhment to be laied vpon them, if they were found offending againe in that ſoꝛt.]

The quéene held a parlement in Edenburgh, where the earle of Huntleis dead bodie was bꝛought pꝛeſent befoꝛe the eſtates in the tolbuith, and foꝛfalted. The earle of Sutherland Geoꝛge Goꝛꝺon was foꝛfalted alſo, and diuerſe other of their friends. And in this parlement the act of oblituion was ratified and appꝛoued, and diuerſe other new acts made. This yeere in Auguſt, the quéene went on pꝛogreſſe into Argile. This yéere deceaſſed diuerſe councellois oꝛ ſenatoꝛs of the college of Juſtice, as maiſter John Stephanſon chancelloꝛ of Glaſcow, and the pꝛouoſt of Coꝛſtrophine. In place of the firſt, maiſter John Leſle, officiall of Aberden, was pꝛomoted; and in the pꝛouoſts place maiſter James Baulfour ſucceéded. There came an ambaſſadoꝛ from the king of Sweden, to treat of a mariage to be contracted with the

Vpon which bad ſpéech, the earles of Murreie and of Glencarne (which well vnderſtood that the Hamiltons did not ſéeke the publike commoditie, but their owne priuat riches as perſons that were nert to the crowne after the queens death) did abhor the ſlaughter and gouernement of the Hamiltons, whom of late they had felt to be both cruell and couetous: and did therefore giue more mild and ſound counſell, ſaieng that this diſſention being ciuill, was not yet come to be bloudie: in which hitherto they had onelie contended with words & not with ſwords, being not yet ſo far, but that (if it were poſſible) the ſame might be ended with honeſt conditions.

To the perſuaſion whereof, he ſaid that there were manie in the camps of the two princes, which gréedilie deſired to heare of peace, & would not faile to further their endeuor therein, nor to defend themſelues & their cauſe with néedfull weapons: all which did perchance foreſée that the king and quéene (by reaſon of their youth) had not yet faulted ſo greatlie, as that it turned to the vtter ouerthrow of the common-wealth; & if they haue faults (as who hath not) they were ſuch as were rather to their owne priuat reproch than otherwiſe, and therefore they ought not to be puniſhed with ſtat death: but rather to be cured with eaſier remedies. For he did remember it to haue alwaies bæne obſerued heretofore, that in the life of kings, we ſhould alwaies couer their ſecret vices, we ſhould mildlie interpret their doubtfull faults, and we ſhould with patience beare their knowne euils: ſo that they did not by them bring vtter deſtruction to the common-wealth.

When this opinion was pleaſing to moſt of the hearers, the other Hamiltons (except James, which was head of that familie) determined to reſt in quiet; but he accompanied with ſixtéene horſſes remained with the lords. Who being now ſo weakened of their power, that they could neither wage battell, nor ſafelie paſſe to their owne; did giue place to the time, and went that night to Hamilton.] The quéene aſſembled an armie, and went to Glaſcow to purſue them [at what time (as ſaith Buchanan) the earle of Lennor was made warden of the eaſt marches, and the duke and earles with other of their compa-

The lords went vnto Dunfreis.

The quéene hearing thereof, by aduiſe of hir councell aſſembled forth of all the parts of the whole realme an armie, appointing the ſame to be at Beggar, in the beginning of October, to purſue the rebels. In the meane time, ſhe hearing that the townes of ſaint Andrewes, Dundée, and ſaint Johns towne, had helped the lords to raiſe men of warre for their ſupport, paſſed thither hirſelfe, and toke inquiſition thereof, giuing order in thoſe townes, that no ſuch thing ſhould afterwards be put in practiſe. But there were none that ſuffered death for that matter; but diuerſe were committed to priſon in the north parts of the realme, as the prouoſt and bailzeis of ſaint Andrewes: alſo certeine of the towne of Dundée, and ſaint Johns towne, and other were baniſhed; and diuerſe barons, as Lundie, Lango, and Balward, were ſent to Aberden, and to other parts, where they remained the winter following.

Certeine townes are puniſhed.

About this time, the quéene toke the caſtell of Tantallon from the earle of Morton, becauſe he was ſuſpected to fauor the rebels. The keeping thereof was giuen to the earle of Atholl. The quéene returning to Edenburgh in September, prepared all things neceſſarie for the armie, and departing from Edenburgh, came to Beggar, where all the noblemen with their retinues were aſſembled the eight of October. From thence they paſſed forward to Dunfreis. In the meane time, the duke of Chatelerault, the earles of Murreie, Glencarne, Roths, the lord Ochiltre, the abbat of Kilwinning, the lards of Grange, Cuningham, Herdie, Pettarrow, maiſter James Haliburton tutor of Petcur, and others, hearing of the quéens comming with an armie, fled into England & came to Caerleill, where they were receiued, the earle of Bedford at that time being lord lieutenant of the north.

The lords fled into England.

The lord Herris then maiſter of Marwell conueied them to the water of Sulweie, and afterward returned to Dunfreis to the quéene, where (of hir clemencie) he got pardon of his offenſe; and the lards of Lochinwar and Drumlanrig likewiſe. After the armie had taried certeine daies, putting direction for obſeruing of good order in the countrie, the quéen returned to Edenburgh, where ſhe remained all the next winter. The quéene ſent the maiſter Dauid Chalmer chancellor of Roſſe into France to the the king, with letters for his aſſiſtance againſt hir rebels. And ſhortlie after, the French king ſent a gentleman called monſieur Paluoiſer into Scotland, with verie friendlie letters vnto the quéene, promiſing his helpe & aſſiſtance againſt the rebels; which meſſage was moſt thankefullie receiued, and the ſaid Paluoiſer honorablie at his departure rewarded.

Their conuoiers got their pardon.

The quéene returned againe into Edenburgh.

The quéene ſent into France for aid.

The duke of Chatelerault, and the other lords with him departed from Caerleill to Newcaſtell vpon Tine, and from thence ſent the earle of Murreie, and the abbat of Kilwinning to the quéene of England, making ſute to hir grace for aid to be reſtored to their countrie againe. The quéens maieſtie promiſed them, that ſhe would ſend a gentleman to the quéene hir ſiſter, and moue hir in their fauors, as ſhe did; and ſo they returned to Newcaſtell, where the duke of Chatelerault, perceiuing no other helpe appearing, ſent the abbat of Kilwinning into Scotland to the quéene with letters, ſubmitting himſelfe to hir graces will, and ſo he obteined pardon for him and his friends, with licence to paſſe into France, there to remaine the ſpace of fiue yeares, and ſhortlie after he paſſed through England, and ſo ouer into France, according to his appointment.

The lords ſend to the quéene of England.

The quéene of England ſent to the quéene of Scots.

The king paſſed the moſt part of that winter in the countries of Fife, Stratherne, Striueling ſhire, & Louthian, ſpending his time in hawking. The quæne remained at Edenburgh with the nobilitie, and becauſe ſhe was conceiued with child, trauelled little abroad. ✠ About this time was a new order taken for placing the king and quéens name in all their writings and patents. For where, vntill this time, the kings name was ſet before the quéens: now quite contrarie, the name of the quéene was written before the kings: beſides which, afterward the quéene hir ſelfe would onelie ſet hir name to the writings in place of hirs and his; and Dauid the ſecretarie was apointed in his place to haue a ſtampe of the kings name, to vſe when néed required.]

The king went a hawking.

Bucha. lib. 17.

In the meane time a parlement was called, to be holden in the moneth of March next inſuing, and ſummons decréed againſt the earle of Murreie, and the other lords that remained in England, and alſo againſt the earle of Argile, lieng then in his countrie of Argile to heare them forfalted. The French king ſent monſieur Rambeueullet into Scotland, as ambaſſador from him to the quéene, with commiſſion, to make the king hir huſband knight of the order of S. Michaell. Which with great ſolemnitie and reuerence was accompliſhed in the chappell of Holie rood houſe the tenth of Februarie, being ſunday: after the which, the ſaid Rambeueullet returned into France, being highlie rewarded.

A parlement.

The lords that were exiled are ſummoned.

The king receiued the order of ſaint Michaell.

1566.

From that time that the parlement was proclaimed, and the ſummons alſo publiſhed, the earle of Murreis friends being in Scotland, neuer ceaſſed to ſéeke all the waies and means they could deuiſe to ſtaie the ſame: in ſo much that the earle of Morton, the lord Ruthwen, and the lord Lindſeie, ſecretlie perſuaded the king to ſtaie the parlement, and alſo to conſent to the reſtoring of the erle of Murreie and his complices, making to him faithfull promiſe, that if he would follow their counſell, he ſhould be made & crowned king of Scotland abſolutelie, and the quéene ſo to haue leſſe to do with the gouernement afterwards, where through he agréed to them.

They perſuade with the king.

The king ſoone perſuaded.

And ſo after the parlement was aſſembled, the lords of the articles being choſen the ſeuenth day of March, they perceiuing the forfalture like to proceéd, and iudgement therof to be giuen, the eleuenth of March next following, the king with the aſſiſtance of the ſaid earle of Morton, the lords Ruthwen, and Lindſeie, entred into the quéens priuie chamber about eight of the clocke in the night, being ſaturday, and the ninth of March; where being arriued in warlike manner, the lord Ruthwen declared vnto the quæne, that they would not ſuffer hir anie longer to haue the gouernement of the realme, to abuſe the ſame by the counſell of ſtrangers, as ſhe had done; and therefore pulled violentlie out of hir chamber Dauid Richeo an Italian, that was one of hir ſecretaries, crieng pitiouſlie, Iuſtitia, Iuſtitia: and in hir vtter chamber they ſuddenlie ſtue him with great crueltie. The king himſelfe was alſo preſent, and his dagger was likewiſe found ſticking in the dead bodie.

The king is entred into the quéens priuie chamber.

Dauid Richeo is ſlaine.

The quéene was ſhut vp within hir chamber, and certeine apointed to attend hir, and to keépe all the dores and gates about the palace. The earles of Huntleie and Bothwell eſcaped by a backe windowe forth in their chamber, wherof the king and his companie were right ſorie. The erle of Atholl and others being with him, departed in the night ſeaſon by a ferrie ouer the Forth, called the quéenes ferrie, and went to S. Johns towne. On the morow being ſunday (the quéene being ſecretlie kept) proclamation was made, that all the lords that had voice in parlement, ſhuld depart out of the towne of Edenburgh: and after none the ſame day, the earles of Murreie and Rothes, with other of their companies that came forth from Newcaſtell the ſaturday before, came to the abbeie of Holie rod houſe about ſix of the clocke in the after none, where they were thankfullie receiued by the king and his companie. They ſpake alſo with the quéene, who had no great comfort of their comming.

The morrow following, being monday, the earle of Murreie, and the other that were ſummoned, paſſed to the tolbuith of Edenburgh, & made their proteſtation there, that they were readie to anſwer in parlement, and none appeared to accuſe them. After this, it was concluded to kéepe the quéene in ſtreict ward. But by hir politike demeanor, their purpoſe in that behalfe was broken: for by ſecret conference with the king, ſhe perſuaded him to thinke, that ſhe had ioined himſelfe with thoſe that would be his deſtruction, if it happened with hir otherwiſe than well; as was no leſſe to be doubted, by reaſon of the high diſpleaſure that ſhe had taken being quicke with child: through the which perſuaſion, and other miſtiking of things, he departed ſecretlie with hir in the night ſeaſon, accompanied onlie with two men, and firſt came vnto Seiton, and after ward from thence to Dunbar.

They make their protestation.

The quéene had cõference with the king.

The king was ſone perſuaded.

Thither the earles of Huntleie and Bothwell haſtilie repaired, by whoſe counſell and others then with hir, ſhe cauſed proclamation to be made in diuerſe parts of the realme, charging all manner of men in feats of warre, to come vnto hir to Dunbar, & to paſſe from thence vnto Edenburgh within ſix dates after. She alſo ſent letters to the ſame effect vnto diuerſe noble men of the realme, who prepared themſelues with great diligence to meet hir. The earle of Murreie and the reſt of the lords being with him, hearing the preparation that was made againſt them, and perceiuing themſelues not able to reſiſt, thought good euerie of them to ſéeke ſome particular meane to obteine remiſſion at the quéens hands. Which they obteined all of them, except the earle of Morton, the lords Ruthwen, Lindſeie, and ſuch other as were with them at the murther of Dauid Richeo. Whereupon they deſparing of pardon, fled into England; where the lord Ruthwen died at Newcaſtell ſhortlie after; as in place ye ſhall heare.

Huntleie and Bothwell.

Proclamation made.

The earle of Lennor, being partaker with them, came to Dunbar, and got pardon: the earle of Glencarne and the laird of Cunninghame head came thither alſo, and were pardoned. Likewiſe the earle of Rothes purchaſed his pardon at the ſame time. The earles of Argile and Murreie, and the lord Boid, being at Lithquo, ſent to the quéene for their pardon, and obteined it, being commanded neuertheleſſe to paſſe into Argile, and to remaine there during hir graces pleaſure, which commandement they obeied.

Pardon is craued and obteined.

The murtherers are excepted.

Manie pardoned.

The eightéenth of March, the quéene well accompanied came to Hadington towards night: and on the nintéenth day, the biſhop of ſaint Andrews, and the Hamiltons met hir at Muſkelburgh, and ſo likewiſe did the lords Leuingſton, Fleming, Hume, Borthwike, and manie other noble men, and conueied hir vnto Edenburgh.

The quéene commeth to Edenburgh.

She lodged in the biſhop of Dunkelds lodging, and taried there a certeine ſpace, hauing with hir the erls of Huntleie, Atholl, Bothwell, Crawford, Marſhall, Southerland, Cathnes, the biſhops of ſaint Andrews and Roſſe, the lords Leuingſton, Fleming, and diuerſe other noble men, by whoſe counſell order was taken for redreſſing of the ſtate of the realme, whereby the ſame was ſhortlie brought to great quietneſſe. After this, the quéene perceiuing hirſelfe to draw néere the time of hir deliuerance, went to the caſtell of Edenburgh, there to remaine till ſhée were deliuered of hir birth. In the moneth of Maie, Thomas Scot ſhiriffe, deputie of Perth, & a prieſt called ſir Henrie Pair, ſeruant to the lord Ruthwen, were apprehended for being doers in the ſlaughter of Dauid, and were hanged and quartered. Their heads were ſet aloft, the one on the tower in the abbeie, and the other on the nether bow.

Execution done vpon the murtherers.

In the moneth of Aprill this yéere, the biſhop of Brechin preſident of the ſeſſion, deceaſſed, and in his rome ſucceéded to that biſhoprike, a friend and couſine to the earle of Argile, called Campbell. In the end of Aprill, the quéene, willing to haue the earles of Argile and Murreie ioined with the reſt of the counſell, ſent for them to come to the caſtell of Edenburgh, where all griefs and controuerſies that reſted betwirt them on the one ſide, and the earles of Huntleie, Atholl, & Bothwell on the other ſide, were referred to the quéene, who agréed them, and they all remained with hir the reſidue of the ſummer. The quéene hearing that the earle of Morton, the lord Ruthwen, and the other their aſſiſtants were receiued in England, and remained at Newcaſtell; ſhée ſent maiſter James Thornton chantor of Murreie, with letters to the quéene of England, and alſo to the king of France, and other hir friends there; declaring by the tenor of the ſame letters the abuſe and preſumptuous attempts of certeine hir ſubiects againſt hir, deſiring them not to receiue them within their realmes or dominions.

The quéene agréeth all the lords.

The quéene made ſute to the quéene of Eglnand.

Shortlie after, the quéene of England ſent a gentleman called Henrie Killigrew into Scotland, with letters and meſſage to the quéene, promiſing to cauſe them to depart forth of hir realme of England: and withall ſent vnto them warning to depart betwirt that preſent time, and midſummer then next inſuing. But in the meane time the lord Ruthwen departed this life at Newcaſtell, with great repentance of his former life: giuing God thanks, for that he had lent him time to call to him for mercie and forgiuenеſſe, whereof he did aſſure himſelfe. And from thenceforth the earle of Morton, and the maiſter of Ruthwen, remained ſecretlie néere to Anwike, and other places of the borders, till they obteined pardon, and were reſtored. About this time there came from the king of France a wiſe aged gentleman, named monſieur la Crocke, as his ambaſſador, and remained in Scotland all the winter following.

The quéene of England hir anſwer.

The lord Ruthwen repented.

An ambaſſage from the king of France.

In the moneth of June, the quéene perceiuing the time of hir deliuerance to approch, wrote vnto all the principall noble men of hir realme, to come and remaine within the towne of Edenburgh, during the time of hir deliuerance, where they aſſembled: and the king hir huſband, with the earles of Argile, Murreie, Atholl, and Mar, remained with hir in the caſtell; and the earle of Huntleie, Bothwell, and the remnant of the lords lodged in the towne. And vpon the nintéenth day of the ſame moneth of June, betwirt 10 and 11 of the clocke before none, hir grace was deliuered of a goodlie man-child, to the great comfort of hir highneſſe, and all hir ſubiects, whereof the nobilitie did greatlie reioiſe. And incontinentlie all the artillerie in the caſtell was ſhot off, and all the lords and people came togither in the church of ſaint Giles, to giue thanks to almightie God for his great and beneficiall goodnes ſhewed to them, in giuing to them a prince, and withall made their humble praiers vnto his diuine maieſtie, to indue him with the feare of God, with vertue and knowledge to gouerne the realme and ſubiects thereof, when ſoeuer the ſame ſhould fall into his hands.

A prince borne.

The ſame night at éeuen, there were great fires for ioy made in the towne of Edenburgh, and in all the the countrie about, and likewise through all the whole realme, as by aduertisements were certified therof. The queene remained still in the castell of Edenburgh all the moneth of Julie following, till shée had recouered hir health and strength. In the beginning of August, she passed vp the water of Forth to Allowaie, where she remained certeine daies, the earles of Murreie and Mar being of companie with hir, and there the king hir husband came to visit hir. The same time monsieur Maluoisir came into Scotland from the king of France, bringing letters to the queene, who was conueied by the bishop of Rosse to Allowaie, where he was ioifullie receiued, courteouslie interteined, and highly rewarded. The queene of England sent maister Henrie Killegrew to the queene with the like message, reioising for hir safe and happie deliuerance, who likewise was receiued in most thankefull maner, and well rewarded.

The princes godfathers & godmothers.

Here is to be noted, that shortlie after she was brought to bed, she sent one of hir gentlemen called monsieur Clarimoich, with letters to the king of France, and to the duke of Sauoie: desiring them to send ambassadors, which in their name (as godfathers) might receiue hir son at the baptisme. Moreouer, she sent James Meluine to the queene of England with the like message, desiring hir maiestie to be godmother [who by hir ambassador Francis earle of Bedford, sent a present to the queene of Scots, (as I. Stow hath noted) a fount of gold curiouslie wrought & inamelled, weieng 333 ounces, amounting in value to 1043 pounds 19 shillings of English monie.] These princes were glad hereof, and promised to send ambassadors to that effect, as afterward they did. In the later end of August, the queene accompanied with the king hir husband, the erles of Huntleie, Murreie, Bothwell, and diuerse other, went into Meggat land, there to passe the time in hunting, where they remained certeine daies: and returning to Edenburgh, caused the prince to bee conueied vnto Striueling castell, where he was committed in keeping to the lord Erskin, after erle of Mar, and his ladie. And from thence the queene went on progresse into Glen Arkeneie.

Fr. Thin. I. Stow pa. 1131 in quart.

Fr. Thin. Buchan. li. 17.

✣ The king as a solitarie person goeth to Striueling, after which the queene determineth to go to Jedworth to assemble a parlement. About the beginning of October, Bothwell prepareth a tournie into Liddisdale, where he was hurt with a calæuer by a base theefe. Wherupon with vncerteine life he was caried to the castell of Hermitage, to which the queene (hearing of his mishap) came, attended with a small traine from Bothwike, and from thence hauing seene Bothwell, did in short time after returne to Bothwike, whither shée caused Bothwell to bee brought: after whose comming thither, the queene fell so grieuouslie sicke, that she was in danger of hir life, at what time the king came thither vnto hir.

In Januarie the king came to Glascow, where he fell sicke, and remouing from thence went to Edenburgh, and the queene accompanied him. She lodged at Holie rod house, but hee was lodged at a house within the towne, neere to the Kirke a field, within the which, on the tenth of the moneth of Februarie in the night he was shamefullie murthered, togither with one William Parat. He was cast into an orchard, and herewith the house was blowne vp with gunpowder. [Some giue report of his death, but touch not the maner thereof, onelie saieng that he was shamefullie murthered in a morning (a heauie breakefast) by his owne (but vnnaturall and rebellious) people, whose innocent blood crieth out for vengeance at the hands of God, who in iustice will (when he seeth due time) giue them their portion with malefactors agreeable to their merits.

The king murthered. 1566. Stow.

The earle of Bothwell murthered the king.

The earle of Bothwell was euen at the first vehementlie suspected to be the principall offendor in this most heinous and detestable murther. But the matter was so handled, that he was not onelie acquit by an assise, as they call it; but also shortlie after maried the queene. By reason wherof, the suspicion that men had alreadie conceiued, that she should be also priuie to the murther, was nothing diminished. But as I haue not to deale in that matter, so yet it is manifest, that some of the Scotish nobilitie, sore repining and maligning at such the spœdie aduancement of Bothwell, who (as euerie man persuaded himselfe, was the principall author of the murther) got them to armes on the sudden, before the queene or Bothwell were aduertised of their meaning, they being then at Borthwike castell, eight miles distant from Edenburgh.

The lords get them to armes.

✣ Thus leauing the lords awhile at Edenburgh, we will say somewhat out of Buchanan, of things done by Bothwell & the queene, before that she was taken by these noble men of the congregation, hauing at that time taken armes against hir. After the death of hir husband, whome she had caused to be buried not farre from Dauid Richeo hir secretarie, slaine (as was thought) by the meanes of the king of Scots: the queene (I say) after that, and also after the clearing of Bothwell from the murther of hir husband, was forceablie taken (as she was on hir iournie) by the earle Bothwell, and caried to his castell, where she remained not long, but yet honorablie interteined. Which fact of his bred great mislike in the peoples minds, and brought him in danger of his life, had not the queene (of hir clemencie) pardoned him the same.

Fr. Thin. Buchan. li. 17.

This done, there was a consultation had for a mariage to be solemnized betweene hir and the earle Bothwell, which (after a diuorse had betweene this earle and his then wife Katharine Gordon, granted by the iudges spirituall & temporall; and after the solemne bands asked betweene the said earle James Hepborne, and the queene Marie Steward) was with great solemnitie of the nobilitie (by their hands in writing consenting thereunto) consummat at Edenburgh. Against which onelie the bishop of Orkenie was found to resist; and at which monsieur de Crocke the French ambassador then in Scotland would not be present: being a thing which did greatlie offend the Edenburgers to mislike of the queene.

Which mariage breeding some euill opinion of the said queene of Scots, not onelie in hir owne realme, but in the mouths of forreine nations, shee wiselie consulteth with hir friends, how she might establish hir power, and prouide to saue hirselfe and hir kingdome from tumults and insurrections. Whereupon, first she determineth to send an ambassador into France, to reconcile the minds of the king, and of the Guises, offended with this mariage. Which office of ambassage was laid vpon William bishop of Dunblane, with this charge (as saith Buchanan) almost word for word.

Buchan. li. 17.

First, you shall excuse to the king, and to our vncles, that our mariage (to be consummate) came to their eares, before that we had opened our counsell touching that matter by anie messengers. This excuse (as it were to a foundation) doth leane to the true exposition of his whole life, and chiefflie to the offices and duties of the duke or capteine of the Orcades towards vs, euen vnto that day in which it seemed good to vs to take him to husband. For the opening of the historie whereof you shall take occasion to treat from the beginning of the last times of his adolescencie (youth, or yeres of discretion, as wee terme it) in this sort.

That when he first began to manage his owne affaires

" faires (being from the death of his father one of the " chiefe of the nobilitie) he did wholie dedicate himſelfe
" to the dutie and ſeruice of the princes and kings of " Scotland, as one borne of a famous familie for his " ancient nobilitie, & of great reuenues in this king-
" dome which he poſſeſſeth by right of inheritance. At " that time alſo he did eſpeciallie and altogither con-" ſecrate himſelfe to our mother, whileſt ſhe had the " gouernement of the realme.

" In which dutie towards hir, he did ſo conſtantlie
" perſeuere, that although the greater part of the no-
" bilitie, and almoſt all the townes were fallen from
" hir obedience (vnder the colour of religion) yet hée
" would neuer decline from hir authoritie, as a per-
" ſon that could not be wone by anie promiſes or be" nefits, or feared with anie threats, or loſſe of his li-
" uings, to neglect his dutie in anie part vnto hir: but " that he wold rather ſuffer his principall houſe, which " was the head of his patrimonie, with his plentifull
" and pretious ſtore of furniture thereof to be taken
" from him, and all his other lands to be left for ſpoile
" to the enimie, than violate his faith to our mother.
" Beſides which, being deſtitute of helpe both of vs
" and our people (when the Engliſh hoſt was brought
" by our domeſticall enimies into the bowels of our
" kingdome, which directed their weapons to none o" ther marke, than that our now husband at that time
" earle Bothwell, ſhould by force be inforced to flie) he " fled into France, forſaking all his patrimonie, where
" he honored me with all dutie and ſeruice (that hée
" might) vntill my returne into Scotland.

" Neither are thoſe exploits to be omitted, which " were done by him in the warres againſt the Eng-
" liſh before my returne into mine owne countrie,
" where he ſhewed ſuch parts of warlike valure and
" graue wiſedome, that he was iudged (being then ve-" rie yong) méet to haue the gouernment of ancient
" perſons, to be made chiefe capteine of the armie of
" the countrie, & alſo to be choſen or ſubſtitute depu-
" tie and chancellor: as in truth he was. In which of" fice he did not deceiue the hope and expectation which " men conceiued of him. For (by his affaires valiant-" lie atchiued) he left a ſingular praiſe and fame of
" him, as well amongſt his owne people, as amongſt
" the enimies.

" After our returne into Scotland, he emploied
" all his indeuor to the inlarging of our authoritie, and
" ſpared not to put himſelfe in danger, in ſubduing
" thoſe rebels which dwell about the borders of Eng" land. The diſpatch wherof being thortlie performed,
" and they brought to great quiet, he was appointed to
" do the like in all the other parts of the kingdome.
" But as enuie doth alwaies accompanie vertue, ſo
" the Scots repining thereat, and deſirous of innoua-
" tion, did labor to diminiſh our fauour towards him
" (for his great labors imploied in our behalfe) in miſ-
" conſtruing his good deeds.

" By which in the end they wrought ſo much with " me, that we committed him to priſon; partlie to ſa-
" tiſfie the minds of ſuch as were emulous againſt
" him, and could not brooke the increaſe of his follow" ing honor and greatneſſe; and partlie to appeaſe ſuch
" ſeditions as were likelie then to breake forth to the " deſtruction of the whole kingdome. But he (eſcaping
" out of priſon) got him into France, to giue place to
" the power of his enimies, where he remained almoſt
" two yéeres next following. At what time the authors " of the former ſedition, forgetting my clemencie to" wards them, and their dutie towards vs, did raiſe
" warre, and take weapons againſt their quéene.

" From thence was he called backe into Scotland,
" & being reſtored to his former honors & poſſeſſions,
" he was againe made generall of all the armie: by
" whoſe helpe our authoritie began afreſh ſo to floriſh,
" that all the rebels (ſuddenlie forſaking their coun-" trie) were inforced to flie into England, vntill part
" of them vpon humble ſubmiſſion were receiued a" new into our fauour. But how traitorouſlie I was " handled by the reſt that were reſtored (and eſpeciallie
" ſuch, whoſe anceſtors I had with benefits moſt pro" moted) our vncle is not ignorant, and therefore we
" will touch that no more.

" Neither is it to be ouerpaſſed in ſilence, with what " diligence he deliuered me from the hands of ſuch as " deteined me priſoner, and with what ſpeed (and ſingu-
" lar prouidence of his) I did both eſcape from priſon,
" and recouered my former authoritie: after that I
" had diſperſed the factions of the conſpirators and ſe" ditious perſons. In which trulie I am inforced to
" confeſſe, that his dutie and diligence at that time
" ſhewed towards me, was ſo acceptable vnto me,
" that I could neuer after forget it. Theſe things al" though they be great of themſelues, yet he hath hi-
" ther to increſed them with ſuch diligence and careful-
" neſſe, that we cannot deſire greater dutie, or with " more aſſured truſt in anie man, than we haue found
" in him; vntill theſe laſt times which followed the de-
" ceaſſe of our husband.

" But from that time, as his thoughts did ſéeme to " tend higher, ſo his actions did after a ſort ſéeme to be " more inſolent. And although the matter went ſo far,
" that we were to take all things in the beſt part: yet
" theſe things did then moſt greeuouſlie offend me; but " eſpeciallie his arrogancie, in that he thought that " there were not other ſufficient abilities in vs, to re-
" compenſe his deſeruings, vnleſſe we gaue our ſelfe
" to him in mariage. Touching which, at the firſt he v" ſed ſecret reaſons and counſels: but in the end, when
" he ſaw them not to ſucceed after his mind, at length,
" ſhewing an open contempt of my authoritie, he fled
" to the benefit of violence, and vſed force (to the end
" his attempt might not want due effect) to bring me
" vnder his gouernement.

" Wherefore all this courſe of his life maie be an " example, to ſhew how craftilie they can contriue
" their drifts (in attempting great things) vntill they
" haue obteined their purpoſe. For I did ſuppoſe, that " all this his continuall dutie and carefulneſſe in ſpée-
" die obeieng of my commandements, had not iſſued
" from anie other founteine, than of a vehement deſire
" to ſhew his obedience and good will towards me:
" neither did I hope that a litle more fauourable coun" tenance (which we are accuſtomed to vſe to the more
" worthie perſons, to the end to win their minds to be " more obedient to vs in dutie) ſhould ſo haue raiſed
" his ſtomach (more than anie others) that he would
" promiſe to himſelfe anie larger good will to proceed
" from me towards him, than he had before.

" But he taking aduantage of all haps, & drawing
" all things (that chanced) to the furtherance of his
" purpoſe, and keeping all his counſels ſecret from me,
" did ſtill ſhew his accuſtomed dutie, nouriſhed my old
" fauour to him, & ſecretlie attempted a new thing by
" the helpe of the nobilitie. Which he brought to paſſe
" with ſuch ſpéedie diligence, that (vnknowen to me)
" he obteined of the péeres of the realme (in the aſſem" blie of the parlement héere) a writing with all their " hands ſet therevnto, for the more credit of the ſame.
" In which writing was conteined, that they did not
" onlie aſſent vnto the mariage; but that they alſo fur" ther promiſed to ſpend their life and goods (offered to
" all dangers) in the executing thereof, and that they " would be vtter enimies to all ſuch as ſhould labor to " hinder it. For the more eaſie obteining of whoſe con-
" ſents in this ſort, he had perſuaded the ſaid nobilitie,
" that the ſame was not done againſt my mind and " conſent. At length, when he had purchaſed this writ-
" ting from them, he began by litle and litle (with ear-
" neſt

" nest intreaties & flatteries) to obteine our consent. But when at the first our answers did not conteut his desire, he began to laie before me almost all those things, which are accustomed to happen in the attempt of such matters.

" First, the outward tokens of our good fauour towards him, the reasons by which our friends or his enimies might hinder the same, & manie other things which being obiected or willinglie happening, might frustrate his hope, or change the minds of such as had before subscribed. At length (fortune fauouring him therein) he determined to pursue the matter, & in one instance to hazard his hope and life about the same. Wherefore, when he had determined with himselfe, with all importunitie to attempt the successe of his determination, he foure daies after hauing conuenient time and place therefore in the high waie, set vpon me with a strong hand, as I was comming from séeing of my déere sonne, and with gteat spéed caried me to Dunbar.

Which euill déed how gréeuouslie we toke (especiallie done by him, from whome all our subiects neuer loked to haue such things to procéed) euerie bodie maie easilie consider. For there I did vpbraid him, with what fauour I haue alwaies vsed him, what honorable opinion I haue had of him and of his conditions in my spéech vsed to others, and of his vnthankefulnesse to me therefore; with all other things that might deliuer me out of his hands. These matters I laied against him with bitter words. But his answers therevnto were more mild, and tempered with gentler spéeches, in this, that he would still vse all honor and dutie towards vs, and labor by all means to haue our good will, whom he would not offend.

" As touching this, that he had against our will caried vs into one of our own castels, he humblie craued pardon therefore (in that he was inforced therevnto) although in the same he had forgotten that reuerence and dutie, which euerie subiect owght vnto vs. Wherevnto he added, that he did the same for our safetie and defense. At which time also he began to repeat vnto me the whole course of his life, lamenting his fortune, to haue them (whome he neuer hurt) so gréeuouslie offended with him, that their malice had not ouerpassed anie occasions vniustlie to hurt him withall.

" But especiallie in this, that their great enuie had burdened him with the murther of the king, and that his power was vnequall to resist the secret conspiracies of his enimies, whome he could not know; because they did in shew and spéeches dissemble their friendship: & not knowing them, there was no waie for him to foresée and auoid their deceipts. Whose extreme hatred was now growen to such height, that he could not liue in safetie in anie place, or at anie time, except he might be assured of the quéenes vnchangeable fauour towards him. Which certeintie of hir fauor could not be shewed but by this one meane, to persuade hir selfe to receiue him into the mariage bed. At what time he did most holilie sweare, that he gaped not after anie extraordinarie gouernement, or that he would leape to the highest step of soueremerule thereby; but onlie to reape this fruit thereof, that he might serue and obeie hir as long as he liued, in such sort as he did before. Wherevnto he added the delights of such spéeches as that matter required.

" But in the end, when he saw that we could not be moued therevnto, either with praiers or promises; he shewed vnto vs what he had done with the whole nobilitie, and the chiefe of the parlement, and what they againe had promised vnder their hands. Which being suddenlie and vnhoped for laied against vs, whether it did with iust cause greatlie astonish vs, we leaue to the consideration of the king, the quéene, our vncles, and the rest of our friends. Wherefore, when I perceiued my selfe a prisoner vnder the power of an other man, farre from the helpe of all those whose counsell I did and should haue vsed; yea and that I saw them before my face, in whose former faith and wisedome I did repose my selfe; whose strength did defend our authoritie, and without which our power was but small or none: when (I say) I had seene all these to haue vowed themselues to serue his desire, and that I was alone left a prete for him, I did with my selfe in my mind consider manie things, but could bring none of them to effect.

" Besides which, he gaue to vs but short time to take anie aduise, but incontinentlie and importunatlie did still vrge the same vnto me. At length, when I saw no waie to escape by flight, nor anie person of all our kingdome which had anie care of our libertie (for we well perceiued by their hands giuen, and by their deepe silence at that time, that they were all drawen to take his part) I was compelled (after that I a lit tle pacified mine anger & displeasure against him) to refer my selfe to the discusse and consideration of his demands, & to laie before my selfe his dutie in times past, and the hope which we had of the following continuance of the same towards vs.

" And further, how gréeuouslie our people would suffer a strange king, and beaullie receiue one vnacquainted, and not inured with their lawes and customs, that they would not suffer me long to liue vnmaried, and that the people (being by nature factious) could not be kept in obedience, except our authoritie were supported and practised by a man which could equall them in bearing labor, and were able to bridle the insolencie of rebels in the administration of the common wealth: the weight of which charge, our power (being weakened and almost brought to nothing by continuall tumults and rebellions, since our comming into Scotland) was not able anie longer to sustéine. For by reason of these seditions, we were inforced to appoint foure or more deputies in diuerse parts of our realmes, which afterward also did (vnder the colour of the authoritie which they were permitted to vse vnder vs) inforce our owne subiects to take armes against vs.

" For all which causes, when we well perceiued that if we labored to preserue the dignitie of kinglie maiestie, that they would inforce me to mariage, that our people could not abide a forren prince, and that amongest our owne subiects, there was not anie which for the nobilitie of his familie, for his wisdome and valure, or for other vertues of bodie and mind, might be preferred before or equalled vnto him, I commanded my selfe to ioine with the whole consent of the parlement, and assemblie of the nobilitie before mentioned. After that my former constant determination was thus somewhat mollified by these and other reasons, he did wring from me partlie by force, and partlie by intreatie, a promise to him of mariage.

" Which done, we could not yet by anie meanes and persuasion obteine of him (fearing an alteration in our mind) that the time wherein this mariage should be performed, might be deferred so long, as that we might participat the same with the king and quéene of France, and such other friends as we had remaining in those parts. For he beginning with a bold attempt (after that he had once thereby atteined the first step of his desire) did neuer after that ceasse to ioine importunat praiers to his persuasions and arguments of reason, vntill he did without violence inforce vs to set end to the worke begun, and that at such time, and after such order, as seemed most conuenient vnto him for the execution of his determination

These remedies being found to defend the quéens credit amongſt forren princes, other remedies were to be ſought for defenſe of hir owne perſon againſt hir owne ſubiects. Wherefore (after that the earle of Murreie was appointed to remaine as baniſhed beyond the ſeas in France, whither he toke his iournie through England) the quéene (deliuered of ſuch a feare as he was to hir, & therfore better able to rule, or at leaſt to make better ſhift, with ſuch other as were conioined, to vſe Buchanans word, againſt hir) vſed what diligence ſhe might to gather forces, eſpeciallie in the Mers and eaſt Louthian.]

And thinking that the enterprize of the lords had béene broken and diſappointed, they marched from Dunbar on ſaturdaie the fourth of June, firſt to Hathington, & there reſting till the euen, ſet forward to Gladiſmore, and taking there deliberation in the matter; they lodged that night at Seiton, and in the morning marched in order of battell towards Carbarrie hill, and there choſe forth a plot of ground of great aduantage, appointing to fight on foot, becauſe the power of the lords in number of horſſemen, was ſtronger than the quéens, and of greater experience. There were with the quéene and Bothwell, the lords Seiton, Peſter, and Borthwike; alſo the lards of Wauchton, Bas, Drmiſton, Wederburne, Blackater, and Langton. They had with them alſo two hundred harquebuſiers waged, and of great artilleric ſome field péces. Their whole number was eſtéemed to be about 2000: but the more part of them were commons & countriemen.

The number of the quéens power.

The earles of Morton, Atholl, Mar, Glencarne, the lords of Hume, Lindſeie, Ruthwen, Sempill, Sauquhar; the lards of Drumlangrig, Tulibardén, Grange, and yong Seſford, were aſſembled togither at Edenburgh with a power like in number to the quéens, but for the more part conſiſting of gentlemen, although not furniſhed with anie number of harquebuſiers, except a few of the townſmen of Edenburgh; that willinglie ioined with them in that quarrell. Upon the fifteenth of June, they came forth of the towne, and approched their aduerſaries. But there was monſieur la Croque, the French kings ambaſſadour, who toke great paine, in trauelling betwixt the parties to reduce them to ſome agréement. ✻ Who by his interpretor laid before them how carefullie he had ſtudied for the commoditie & tranquillitie of the publike ſtate of Scotland before this; and that now alſo he caried the ſame mind with him. Wherefore he did vehementlie deſire (if it were poſſible) that the matter might be ſo taken vp, for the commoditie of both parties; that it might be ended without force or bloudſhed. For the compaſſing whereof, he would imploie all his trauell, ſith the quéene alſo did not refuſe to heare the counſell & perſuaſion of peace. For the more certeintie wherof, he did at that time promiſe them pardon and vtter forgetfulneſſe of all things paſſed before time; & did with great holineſſe there pledge him ſelfe, that no hurt ſhould fall vnto anie man there, for taking weapon againſt the higheſt gouernor.

Fr. Thin. Bucha. lib. 18.

After that the interpretor had deliuered theſe things, the earle of Morton anſwered, that he did not take armor againſt the quéene; but againſt him that had killed the king. Whome if the quéene would deliuer to puniſhment, or ſeparat him from hir; ſhe ſhould well vnderſtand, that they & the reſt of hir ſubiects held nothing more déere vnto them, than to continue in their dutifull obedience: without which granted to them, there could be no agréement made; becauſe they came not thither to craue pardon for anie offenſe which they had committed (wherevnto the earle of Glencarne added) but rather to giue pardon to ſuch as had offended.]

Wherefore the ambaſſador Croque returned backe to Edenburgh, and the quéens part began to decreaſe, diuerſe ſhrinking awaie from hir; ſo that after it began to grow towards the euening, Bothwell fled to the caſtell of Dunbar. But the quéene deſirous to talke with William Kircadie the lard of Grange, went to him, accompanied onelie with one capteine, and after ſome talke with him, ſhe paſſed to the lords, who toke hir with them to Edenburgh, [ſhe being in a ſhort garment, baſe, & worne, coming a little beneath hir knees (as ſaith Buchanan) of which lords ſhe requeſted that they would ſuffer hir to depart, & not to keepe hir in that ſort.] The Hamiltons were on the waie comming to aſſiſt the quéene, with ſeuen or eight hundred horſſemen; but before they could reach to the place, the quéene was in the hands of the lords, and ſo they returned.

The quéene commeth to the lords.

Fr. Thin.

The lard of Cragmiller [then prouoſt of Edenburgh] and ſir James Balfure alſo the capteine of the caſtell, were ioined in this confederacie with the lords, as ſhortlie after it appeared. The quéene after this was conueied ouer the Forth, and brought to Lochleuin, where ſhe was appointed to remaine in ward vnder the ſafe keeping of William Dowglas lard of that place. The earle Bothwell, eſcaping to Dunbar, found meanes to flée into Denmarke, where he was ſtaied and committed to priſon, wherein at length he died. Diuerſe perſons afterwards were apprehended as parties to the murther of the king, and thereupon condemned, were executed, confeſſing the ſaid earle to be the principall executor of the ſame murther. ✻ Leauing the quéene therfore in this miſerable plight, we will not yet forget (for the honor ſhe once had) to ſet downe certeine verſes made by Alexander Seton a Scot, in the commendation of hir anceſtors, and of hir; who in the firſt yeares of hir gouernement vſed hir ſelfe to the good liking of all hir ſubiects. Iames the sixt.

THe nineténth of Julie, Charles James the yong prince of Scotland, after a sermon made by John Knor, was crowned king of the Scots in Sterling church, where were read certeine letters of commission and procuration, with the quéens priuie seale at them for the establishing of the same coronation. The first, for hir resignation of the crowne and gouernement of the yong prince hir sonne. The second, to authorize the earle of Murreie to be regent during the kings minoritie. The third, to giue authoritie and power to seuen other ioining with the said earle of Murreie, in case he should refuse to exercise the same alone; that is to say, the duke of Chatelerault, the earls of Lennor, Argile, Atholl, Morton, Glencarne, and Mar. The tenors of which letters of commission and procuration do héere insue, as we find them imprinted at Edenburgh by Robert Lekpreuic printer to the king of Scots, the first of Aprill 1568, among the acts of parlement begun and holden at Edenburgh, the fiftéenth of December, in the yeare 1567, by James earle of Murreie lord Abernethie, &c: regent vnto the said king.

The tenor of the commission, whereby Marie the queene of Scots resigneth the crowne to hir sonne, appointeth his gardians, and maketh the earle of Murreie regent.

MArie be the grace of God queene of Scotis, to all and sindrie our iudgeis and ministeris of law, liegis and subiectis, quhome it effeiris to quhais knalege thir our letteris sall come, greting. Forsamekle as by lang irkesome and tedious trauell takin by vs, in the gouernament of this our realme and liegis thairof, we are sa verit and werit, that our bodie, spirit, and sensis are altogeddir become vnhabill langer to trauell in that rowme: and thairfore we haue dimittit and renuncit the office of gouernament of this our realme and liegis thairof, in fauouris of our anelie maist deir sonne, natiue prince of this our realme. And because of his tender zouth and inhabilitie to vse the said gouernament in his awin persoun, during his minoritie, we haue constitute our derrest brother James earle of Murreie, lord Abernethie, &c: regent to our said sonne, realme and liegis foirsaidis.

And in respect that our said derrest brother is actuallie furth of our realme, and cannot instantlie be present to accept the said office of regentrie vpon him, and vse and exerce the samin during our saidis derrest sonis minoritie; we quhill his returning within our relme, or in cais of his deceis haue maid, constitute, namit, appointit, & ordainit, and by thir our letteris makis, constitutis, namis, appointis, and ordainis our traist consingis and counsalouris, James duke of Chatelerault, earle of Arrane, lord Hamiltoun, Matho earle of Lenínar, lord Dernleie, &c: Archibald earle of Argile, lord Campbell and Lorne, &c: John earle of Atholl, James earle of Mortoun, Alexander earle of Glencarne, and John earle of Mar, regentis to our said derrest son, realme and liegis; & in cais our said brother James earle of Murreie cum within our realme, and refusis to accept the said office of regentrie vpon his singular persoun, we make, constitute, name, appoint, and ordeine, our traist consingis and counsallouris foirsaidis, and our said brother regentis of our said deir sonne, realme, and liegis.

Geuand, grantand, and committand to thame, or onie fiue of thame coniunctlie full power for our said sonne, and in his name to ressaue resignationis of landis, make dispositiounis of wairdis, nonentressis, releuis, mariageis, beneficis, eschetis, officis, and vtheris casualiteis and priuilegeis, quhat sumeuer concerning the said office, signatouris thairvpon to make, subscriue, and cause be past throughe the seillis. And to vse and exerce the said office of regentrie in all thingis, priuilegeis, and commoditeis, sicklike as frælie and with als greit libertie as onie regent or gouernor to vs or our predecessouris vsit the samin in ony times bigan. Promittand to hald firme and stabill in the word and faith of ane prince, to quhatsumeuer thingis our saidis traist consingis dois in the premissis.

Charging heirfore zow all and sindrie our iudgeis and ministeris of law, liegis and subiectis foirsaidis, to answer and obeie to our saidis traist consingis, regentis foirsadis in all and sindrie thingis concerning the said office of regentrie, during our said derrest sonis minoritie, and ay and quhill he be of the age of seuentéene zeiris compleit. As ze and ilkane of zow will declair zow luifing subiectis to our said maist deir son, zour natiue prince, and vnder all paine, charge, and offense that ze and ilkane of zow may commit and incur agains his maiestie in that pairt. Subscriuit with our hand, and giuen vnder our priuie seill, at Lochlenin, the foure and twentith day of Julij, and of our reigne the fiue and twentith zeir.

The commission, authorising certeine noble men in the queens name, to renounce the kingdome to hir sonne, and authorising others to receiue the same in hir sons name.

MArie be the grace of God quéene of Scotis, to all and sindrie our iudgeis, and ministeris of law, liegis, and subiects, quhome it effeiris, to quhais knalege thir our letteris sall cum, greting. Forsamekle as sen our arriuall, and returning within our realme, we willing the commoun commoditie, welth, profeit, and quietnes thairof, liegis, and subiects of the samin, haue employit our bodie, spirit, haill sensis, and forcis, to gouerne the samin in sic sort, that our rotall and honorabill estate micht stand and continue with vs, and our posteritie, and our luifing and kind liegis micht inioie the quietnisse of true subiectis. In trauelling quhairin, not anelie is our bodie, spirit, and sensis sa verit, brokin, and vnquietit, that langer we are not of habilitie be onie meane to indure sa greit and intollerabill panis and trauellis, quhairwith we ar altogidder werifi, bot als greit commotiounis and troublis be sindrie occasiounis in the meintime hes ensuit thairin, to our greit greif. And seingit hes bene the pleasour of the eternall God,

God, of his kindlie luſe, mercie, and gudnes to grant vnto vs, of our awin perſoun, ane ſone, quha in cais be the hand of God we be veſeit, will, and of richt, and of equitie man, and aucht to ſucceid to vs and to the gouernement of our realme. And knawing that all creaturis ar ſubiect to that immutabill decreit of the eternall, ains to rander and gif vp this liſe tempozall (the hour and time quhairof is maiſt vncertane) and in cais be deceis we be takin fra this liſe, during the time of his minozitie, it maie be dowtit greitlie, that reſiſtance and troubill maie be maid to our ſaid ſon, now natiue pzince of this our realme, in his tender zeires (being ſwa deſtitute of vs) to ſucceid to that rowme and kingdome, quhilk maiſt iuſtlie of all lawis aperteneis to him. Quhilk inconuenience be Godis helpe and gud pzouidence we mene to pzeuent, in ſick maner, that it ſall not lie in the power of onie vnnaturall ſubiects to reſiſt Godis ozdinance in that behalfe. And vnderſtanding that na thing eirdlie is mair ioious, and happie to vs, noz to ſee our ſaid derreſt ſonne, in our awin life time peciablie placit in that rowme, and honozabill eſtate quhairto he iuſtlie aucht and man ſucceid to: we of the motherlie affectioun we beir toward our ſaid onlie ſonne, haue renuncit, and dimittit, and be thir our letteris freelie, of our awin motiue will renuncis, & dimittis the gouernement, guiding and gouerning of this our realme of Scotland, liegis, and ſubiects thairof, and all intromiſſioun and diſpoſitioun of onie caſualiteis, pzoperties, benefices, and offices, and all thingis apertaining, oz heirtofoir is knawin, oz heirefter ſall happen to apertein thairto, in fauouris of our ſaid derreſt ſone. To that effect, that he maie be plantit, placit, & poſſeſſit thairin, vſe & exerce all thingis belang and thairto, as natiue king, and pzince of the ſamis, & ſiclike as we oz onie our pzedeceſſouris, kingis of Scottis, hes done in onie times bypaſt.

Attour, that this our dimiſſioun maie tak the mair ſolempne effect, and that nane pzetend ignozance thairof, we haue giuin, grantit, and committit, and be thir our letteris, geuis, grantis, & committis our commiſſioun full, fre, and plane power, generall, & ſpeciall command, to our traiſt couſingis, Patrike lozd Lindeſaie of the Biris, and William lozd Ruthuen, and to ilk ane of thame coniunctlie and ſeuerallie, to compeir befoze ſa monie of the nobilitie, clergie, burgeſſis, and vther pepill of our realme, as ſall happin to be aſſemblit to that effect in our burgh of Striuiling, oz anie vther place, oz placis quhair it ſall be thocht maiſt conuenient, at onie daite oz daiis, and thair publikelie in thair pzeſence, foz vs, in our name, and vpon our behalf dimit, and renunce the gouernement, guiding, & reuling of this our realme, liegis, and ſubiects thairof, all intromiſſioun with the pzopertie, caſualtie, oz vtheris things apertening to vs thairby, and all richt, and title that we had, hes, oz maie haue be onie maner of way thairto, in fauouris of our ſaid ſon, to that effect, that he maie be inaugurat, placit, and rowmit thairin, and the crowne rotall deliuerit to him, and be obeyit in all thingis concerning the ſamin, as we, oz our pzedeceſſouris hes bene in times bypaſt.

And in likewiſe be thir pzeſents geuis, grantis, and committis our full, fre, and plane power, to our richt traiſt couſingis, James earle of Mozton, lozd of Dalkeith, John earle of Atholl, &c: John earle of Mar, &c: Alexander earle of Glencarne, William earle of Menteith, John maiſter of Graham, Alexander lozd Hume, Adam biſchop of Ozkneie, the pzouoſtis of Dundie, Montrois, oz onie of thame, to reſſaue the ſaid renuntiatioun, and dimiſſioun in fauouris of our ſaid ſon, and thair efter the reſſauing thairof, to plant, place, and inaugurat him in the kingdome, and with all ceremonies requiſit to put the crowne rotall vpon his heid, in ſigne and takin of the eſtabliſing of him thairin, and in his name to make, and gif to the ſaidis nobilitie, clergie, burgeſſis, and vtheris our liegis, his pzincelie and kinglie aith detfullie, & lauchfullie as effeiris: and to reſſaue thair aithis, foz due and lauchfull homage to be maid be thame to him, in all times cuming, as becumis ſubiects to thair natiue king and pzince. And generallie all and ſundzie vther thingis to dow, exercc, and vſe, that foz ſure performance and accompliſhment heirof maie, oz can be done, firme and ſtable haldand, and foz to hald all and quhatſumeuer thingis in our name, in the pzemiſſis leidis to be done, in the wozd and faithfull pzomis of ane pzince. And ozdanis thir our letteris (gif neid be is) to be publiſt at all places neidfull. Subſcriuit with our hand, and giuin vnder our pzeuie ſeill, at Lochleuin the foure and twentith daie of Julij, and of our reigne the fiue and twentith zeir, 1567.

The commiſſion, in which the earle of Murreie is alone appointed to be re- gent of the yoong king, and of his kingdome.

MArie be the grace of God, quéene of Scots, to all & ſindzie our iudgis, and miniſteris of our lawis, liegis, and ſubiects, quhome it effeiris, to quhais knalege thir our letteris ſall cum, greting. Forſamekle as efter lang, greit, and intollerable panis, & laubouris takin be vs ſen our arriuall within our realme, foz gouernement thairof, and kœping of the liegis of the ſame in quietnes, we haue not anelie bœne verit in our ſpirit, bodie, and ſenſis thairby, bot als at lenth ar altogidder ſa verit thairof, that our habilitie, and ſtrenth of bodie is not habill langer to indure the ſamin: thairfoze, and becauſe nathing eirdlie can be mair confoztabill and happie to vs in this eird, noz in our life time, than to ſe our deir ſon, the natiue pzince of this our realme, placit in the kingdome thairof, and the crowne rotall ſet on his heid, we of our awin fre will, an ſpeciall motiue, haue dimittit, and renuncit the gouernement, guiding, and gouerning of this our realme of Scotland, liegis, and ſubiects thairof, in fauouris of our ſaid ſon, to that effect: that in all times heirafter, he maie peciablie, and quietlie eniois the ſamin, without troubill, an be obeit as natiue king, and pzince of the ſamin be the liegis thairof.

And vnderſtanding that (be reſoun of his tender zouth) he is not of habilitie in his awin perſoun to adminiſtrate in his kinglie rowme and gouernement, as equitie requiris, quhill that heirefter he cum to the zeires of diſcretioun; and als knawing the pzoximitie of blude ſtandand betuirt vs, our ſaid ſone, and our derreſt brother James erle of Murray, lozd Abirnethie, &c; and haueand experience of the naturall affectioun, and tenderlie luſe he hes in all times bozne, and pzeſentlie beires towardis vs, the honour & eſtate of our ſaid ſone; of quhais luſe and fauour towardis him we can not bot aſſure our ſelfe: to quhome na greter honour, ioy, noz felicitie in eird can cum, noz to ſe our ſaid ſone inaugurat in his kingdome, feirit, reuerencit, and obeit be his liegis thairof. These commissions being read, the bishop of Argile, with two superintendents, proceeded to the coronation: the earle of Morton, and the lord Hume toke the oth for the king, that he should rule in the faith, feare, and loue of God, and to mainteine the religion then preached and exercised in Scotland, and to persecute all aduersaries to the same. The whole ceremonie was done in the Scots English tong, the quéene mother to the king remaining at that time prisoner in Lochleuin. ❧ But before we enter into the augmentation of the historie of this kings time, I thinke it not vnmet to deliuer one thing, which I haue with some wonder obserued in all the kings of Scotland descended of the Stewards: that neuer anie one of them except the first & second king of that name was of the age of man, or of one and twentie yéeres when they put on the kinglie ornaments. A rare thing, and not vnmeet to be considered of, although we can not enter into the secret iudgements of God. The proofe of which matter, being after this sort, I haue set downe in a catalog of the orderlie descent of those kings. In the computation of the yéeres of whose age and first comming to the crowne I haue followed Lesleus.

The kings oth.

Fr. Thin.

Robert Steward the first king of that surname, was 57 yéeres old when he began his reigne, in the yéere of our redemption 1370. John Steward son of the said Robert began his reigne 1390. These two alone were of full age, when the title of the kingdome descended vnto them. James Steward, the first of the name of James, & the third of the name of Stewards, was within age at the death of his father, when the title and crowne descended vnto him: who although he receiued not the crowne at Scone (because he was about eightéene yéeres honorablie kept as a prisoner in England) vntill hée was of mans age: yet being king in right, and the crowne inuested in him when he was within age, I doubt not to make him king from the death of his father, and so within age to haue obteined the kingdome, though not the kinglie vse thereof, beginning his reigne in the yéere of our redemption 1424.

James the second, and the fourth of the Stewards, was six yéeres old when he was crowned, in the yéere of Christ 1436. James the third, and fift of the Stewards, being seuen yéeres old, was crowned king of Scotland in the yéere that the word became flesh 1460. James the fourth, and sixt of the Stewards, being sixtéene yéeres of age, was adorned with the ensignes of the kingdome, in the yéere of our saluation 1488. James the fift, and the seuenth of the Stewards, being one yéere, fiue moneths, and ten dais old, was crowned king of Scotland, in the yéere from the birth of Christ 1513. Marie the eight of the name of Stewards, being but seuen daies old, was crowned quéene of Scots, in the yéere of Christ 1542. Henrie Steward, sonne to Matthew earle of Lennor, and husband to the said Marie Steward, was not one and twentie yéeres old, when he came to be king in the right of his wife Marie: for he was not past one and twentie when he was slaine, as before in the yéere 1567. Charles James Steward, the first of the name of James, and the ninth of the surname of Stewards, sonne of the said Henrie Steward and Marie Steward, being about a yéere old, began his reigne in the yéere that God became man 1567. To whome Andrew Meluine (this yéere 1585 in England) did whilest he was in Scotland dedicate these verses following:

Dum tu, magne puer, patribus das iura vocatis,
Et populi pensas crimina lance pari,
Iunatibi, tuus ille Solon, tuus ille Lycurgus,
Quæ retti è puris fontibus hausta dedit,
Nobilium regum exemplis obsignat auitis,
Hic, vbi quid fugias, quidue sequaris, habes.
Felix si fugias fugienda, sequenda sequaris!
Felix cum populo tuq; patréq; tuo.

There was order taken by the magistrates of the reformed churches, assembled for that purpose, touching the discipline of excommunication, and the excommunicated, diuided into these heads: that is to say, what crimes be worthie of that seuere censure of the church by excommunication: how the minister shall behaue himselfe in publike audience of the people: of confession of the penitent: of the offenses which merit publike repentance: of the order to proceed therein: the forme and the order of publike repentance: an admonition to the church: a thankesgiuing for the conuersion and repentance of the censured: the forme of the excommunication: the praier for the obstinate that will not repent after that censure: the praier before the excommunication:

cation: the maner to inuocate the name of Jeſus, with the ſentence of excommunication: the order to receiue the excommunicate againe into the church: the forme of the abſolution: and laſtlie the praier for the church. Which booke conteining the diſcourſe of theſe matters at large, with authoritie of ſcriptures and reaſons, was ſet forth by John Knox miniſter, and commanded to be printed by the generall aſſemblie, in the yeere of Chriſt 1569, being ſeene and allowed by thoſe which follow, appointed to that function by the ſaid aſſemblie: whoſe names were John Willike, maiſter John Crage, Robert Pont, John Row, Dauid Lindſeie, William Chriſtiſon, James Greg, &c.

A parlement holden at Edenburgh.

On the fiftéenth of December a parlement begun, being holden at Edenburgh before the earle of Murreie lord regent, in the which diuers acts and ſtatutes were deuiſed, made, and ratified: as firſt concerning the quénes demiſſion of hir crowne, and reſignation thereof made to hir ſonne king James the firſt. And likewiſe concerning the inſtituting of the earle of Murreie in the regencie of the realme, which he tooke vpon him the two and twentith day of Auguſt laſt paſt, according to hir letters of commiſſion and procuration aboue ſpecified. Also there was an act made for the aboliſhing of the pope, and his vſurped authoritie. And an other act for the annulling of former acts made in parlement for maintenance of ſuperſtition and idolatrie. And hereto was annexed a confeſſion of the faith and doctrine receiued by the proteſtants of the realme of Scotland, authoriſed in the ſame parlement. There was alſo an act made for the indemnitie of thoſe that had leuied warre, and apprehended the quéene at Carbarrie hill, the fiftéenth of Julie laſt paſt, and concerning the deteining of hir in Lochleuin.

An act for the aboliſhing of the popes authoritie in Scotland.

The caſtell of Dunbar and the fortreſſe of Inſketh to be raced.

Moreouer, it was ordeined by an act paſſed in this parlement, that the caſtell of Dunbar, and the fortreſſe of Inſketh, ſhould be demoliſhed and raced downe to the earth. To be briefe, there were one and fortie acts or ſtatutes made and eſtabliſhed in this parlement, as by the regiſter thereof it maie appéere.

Fr. Thin. Buchanan. lib. 19.

* In the firſt beginning of the ſpring, the gouernor determined to make a progreſſe ouer the realme, with the iudges that were appointed to adminiſter law: which he ment to do, to the end that he might amend and eſtabliſh ſuch things as were indamaged by the tumults of the yeere before. Which matter working diuerſe opinions in thoſe of the quénes faction, did cauſe that Metellane and John Balfurie ſought meanes to deliuer the quéene out of priſon. Touching which matter alſo the Hamiltons labored who (being next to the crowne, if the yong king were gone, and the quéene made awaie, both which perhaps was no great matter to procure) did ioine with the quénes faction and fauourers. Whoſe part in like manner the earles of Atholl and Huntleie refuſed not to take, becauſe the mother of the one, and the wife of the other, were of the familie of the Hamiltons.

William Murreie of Tillibartine, for his contrarie opinion in the controuerſies of religion, and for priuat quarrels, being eſtranged and grieued from and with the gouernor, did not onelie now depart from the kings faction (although before he ſhewed great diligence in taking the quéene) but did alſo drawe with him a great companie of his friends inſtiſed thereunto with no ſmall hope of benefit to riſe vnto them thereby. And as theſe were heads and chiefe of ſuch as ſought the quénes deliuerance: ſo there were a great manie other, whom priuat neceſſitie, ſecret grudge, deſire of reuenge, hope of aduancement, and néereneſſe of aliance to thoſe which are before named, procured to follow, and to further the cauſe of the quénes libertie. In the meane time, whileſt the regent was at Glaſcow to miniſter law to ſuch as required it (and that he had there heard of theſe things) this determination of ſetting the quéene at libertie was put in execution, the manner whereof was in this ſort. There was in the caſtell of Lochleuin, wherein the quéene was kept as priſoner, the mother of the regent, and three of his brethren by an other father, with a great troope of women: but none were admitted to ſee the quéene, ſaue ſuch as were well knowen or ſent thither by the regent.

Of all this houſhold companie, there was none that ſéemed ſo meet to the quéene to execute anie matter, as was George Dowglas the yongeſt brother of the regent, being a man of a pleaſant wit, and eaſilie to be ouertaken with the faire ſpéeches of women. This man had acceſſe vnto the quéene to plaie at cards, and to vſe hir with other courtlie paſtimes: who determining to ſet hir at libertie, did with promiſes and gifts win the ſeruants of the caſtell to fauour him and his enterpriſes. Whereupon this Dowglaſſe (not vnwitting as was thought to his mother) omitteth nothing that might ſéeme to ſerue for the quénes libertie: the which although manie there did perceiue & tooke not in verie good part, giuing intelligence therof to the regent; yet he gaue ſuch credit to his owne people there, that he changed (as hath Buchanan) none of the kéepers in that place, but onelie commanded his brother George to depart out of the Iland. This ſaid George, when he paſſed into the next countrie adioining to the lake, in which the caſtell ſtood, did more liberallie than before (by corrupting the kéepers with monie) conſult with the quéene of all hir affaires.

Wherefore not onelie the Scots (whome the preſent ſtate of things did miſlike) being drawen into that faction; but alſo the Frenchmen by James Hamilton (which had béene regent not manie yéeres before) and James archbiſhop of Glaſcow ſollicited thereunto, the Scots promiſed their bodilie force, and the French promiſed their helping purſe. Now about the end of Aprill, an ambaſſador came out of France requiring in the name of his king, that he might haue leaue to go to the quéene: which if he were denied, he made ſhew that he would preſentlie depart. Whereunto the gouernor anſwered, that it was not in his power to grant it: that the quéene was not committed to priſon by him, and that he could not determine anie thing herein without their knowledge which firſt reſtreined hir of libertie, and after by decrée confirmed that déed: but he would not ceaſſe in pleaſuring his ſiſter, and ſuch a frend as the king (his maiſter) was, to do all that he might: and further, that he would take order for an aſſemblie of the nobilitie the twentith daie of the next moneth. Until which time the ambaſſador ſéemed ſomwhat appeaſed, and the regent aplied the adminiſtration of the lawes.]

On ſundaie the ſecond of Maie, in the yeere 1568, at ſupper time, the quéene eſcaped out of Lochleuin, by the meanes and helpe of George Dowglas brother to the lard of Lochleuin. The lard Seton, the lard of Ricarton, and James Hamilton of Orbiſton, were readie to receiue hir, and conueied hir ouer the quénes ferrie, firſt to Nudrie the lard Setons houſe, and from thence to Hamilton caſtell, where ſhe remained till the thirtéenth daie of Maie being thurſdaie, gathering in the meane time ſuch forces as ſhe might from all places. The earle of Murreie lord regent was in Glaſcow, at what time he thus eſcaped out of Lochleuin; and vpon knowledge had therof, ment at the firſt to haue withdrawen himſelfe to Sterling: but ſuddenlie changing his purpoſe in that behalfe, he determined to continue at Glaſcow, coſw, which is not paſt eight miles from Hamilton, becauſe he was perſuaded, that if ſhe ſhould ſhrinke backe neuer ſo little, he ſhould incourage his aduerſaries, and diſcourage his friends, and ſo conſequentlie weaken his part greatlie. ✻ Which they alſo ſuppoſed was the more weakened, by the departure of Robert Boid (vnto the quænes part) hauing vntill that time wone a great opinion of his conſtancie towards the regent.

This man, being of a famous familie, was now in the decaie of his houſe meanelie and ſparinglie brought vp vnder his father, a valiant gentleman, and one that followed the frugalitie of the Scots, who (willing to prepare a waie to the readuance of his houſe, as manie of his other kinred did) was now content to ſéeke meanes therefore: for which cauſe both he and his father did firſt follow the Hamiltons then ruling all things. But after that their gouernement was poſted ouer from them to the quæne mother the regent; and that contention was moued about religion: he ioined himſelfe to the lords of the congregation, from whome his father was moſt eſtranged: in which this Robert Boid firmelie continued vntill the quænes returne out of France. By meanes whereof, there was a great opinion of his valure & wiſdome, on whoſe counſell Coline Campbell earle of Atholl did almoſt wholie depend. But when by chance certeine of the nobilitie had conſtired or conſpired (to vſe Buchanans word) for no euill act, but for the defenſe of the king, he ſubſcribed to the ſame league.

But after, with like lightneſſe both he and the earle of Argile (which hong vpon his aduiſe) wrote vnto the quæne euerie thing that was done in the ſame aſſemblie, from which time this Boid was partaker of all the quænes ſecrets againſt his old friends, who with the quæne did yet obteine no greater opinion of conſtancie, than he did amongeſt others of lightneſſe and inconſtancie. But after that the quæne was impriſoned, and the earle of Murreie made regent, he went then to the part of the gouernor: with whome he ſhewed ſuch proofe of his wit and induſtrie, that he was admitted into the priuie counſels of the regent, contrarie to the opinion of others. But after when the matter ſhould be tried by fight betwéene the regent & the quæne (after hir eſcape from Lochleuin) he fled againe to the quæne.] All which notwithſtanding, the thirteenth daie of Maie afore mentioned, the quæne with hir power marched from Hamilton, by the ſouth ſide of Clede toward Dunbreton; and out of Glaſcow on the other part marched the lord regent with his forces: ſo as at length both the armies met at a place called the Langſide, néere to the houſe of Cathcart within two miles of Glaſcow.

The armies met at Langſide.

Lords on the quænes part.

There were on the quénes part the earles of Argile, Caſſiles, Eglinton, and Rothes, Claud Hamilton ſonne to the duke of Chatelerault, the lords Seton, Summeruill, Yeſter, Borthwike, Leuingſton, Herries, Marwell, Sauquhar, Boid and Roſſe, lards and knights, Lochinwar, Bas, Wauchton, Dalhouſie, Roſſen the ſhiriffe of Aire, ſir James Hamilton, and manie others. On the regents part were theſe accounted as principall, the earles of Morton, Mar, Glencarne, Menteith, the maiſter of Graham, the lords Hume, Lindſie, Ruthwen, Sempill, Ogiltrée and Cathcart, of lairds and knights, Bargawy, Blacquhan, Drumlanrig, Selford, Lus, Buchanan, Tulibardin, Peteur, Grange, Lochleuin, Lethington, and ſir James Balfour. At the firſt ioining there was a verie ſharpe incounter: for after they had beſtowed their ſhot of harquebuzes and arrows, they fell to it with ſpeares and ſwords. But at length, after three quarters of an houres fight, the quénes part was put to flight.

Lords on the regents part.

The quénes part diſcomfited.

The victorie remained with the regent, who ſuffered none to be ſlaine but thoſe that were killed in the fight, before they turned their backs: among the which were foureténe of the ſurname of the Hamiltons killed. There were taken priſoners about three hundred, of which number the principall were theſe: the lords Seton and Roſſe, ſir James Hamilton, and manie other of that ſurname. Of the regents part, the lord Hume was hurt in the leg and face, and the lord Ogiltree in the necke, by the lord Herries: the lord Lindſeie, and the lards of Drumlanrig, and of Grange, bare themſelues verie valiantlie that day, failing not in anie point that belonged to the dutie of hardie capteins. The quénes part was thought to be néere at the point of ſix thouſand men, and the regents was reckoned to be foure thouſand: ſo that there were ten thouſand men in the field that daie, what vpon the one ſide and the other.

Priſoners taken.

The earle of Huntleie was comming forwards to haue aſſiſted the quænes part, but the battell was ſtriken, and hir people diſcomfited (as ye haue heard) per he could come, and ſo he returned. In this battell the valiancie of an Hieland gentleman named Macferlane, ſtood the regents part in great ſtéed. For in the hotteſt brunt of the fight, he came in with two hundred of his friends and countriemen, and ſo manfullie gaue in vpon the flanke of the quénes people, that he was a great cauſe of the diſordering of them. This Macferlane had béene latelie before (as I haue heard) condemned to die for ſome outrage by him committed: and obteining pardon (through ſute of the counteſſe of Murreie) he recompenſed that clemencie by this péece of ſeruice now at this battell, [which was (as ſaith Buchanan) fought the third daie of Maie, and the eleuenth after the quéne had eſcaped out of priſon.]

The earle of Huntleie comming forward to aid the quéne.

Fr.Thin.

The quéne perceiuing the ouerthrow of hir people, fled from the place where ſhe ſtood to behold the battell, and withdrew to Crawford towne, and ſo by the Sauquhar to Dundrenan in Gallowaie: and after ſhe had taried there two or three daies, ſhe toke ſhip and paſſed to Workington in England, where ſhe was ſtaied & conueied to Caerleill, and from thence to Bolton caſtell, belonging to the lord Scrope, who with ſir Rafe Sadler (being ſent downe for that purpoſe) had the cuſtodie of hir, till at length ſhe was committed vnto the earle of Shrewesburie. ✻ The French ambaſſador, which loked for the good ſucceſſe of this battell, and did promiſe to himſelfe aſſured victorie on the quénes part, vnderſtanding the contrarie, and being deceiued of his former hope, changed his copie, and with horſe and guides haſted all he could into England, without bidding the regent farwell. In which iournie he was robbed by théeues; but James Dowglaſſe, capteine of the marches of Drumlanrig, did this honor to the ambaſſador, that he had all his goods reſtored vnto him.]

Fr.Thin. Buchanan lib.19.

But now to the doings in Scotland. The regent ſent to ſummon Hamilton caſtell, but the anſwer was reſpited till the nert daie: and then he that had the charge came to Glaſcow, and offered the keies to the regent. The caſtell of Draſkan was alſo yéelded at the ſame time to the regent. The eightenth of Maie, the regent made proclamation, that the inhabitants of the ſhires of Merns, Angus, Fife, Mers, Louthian, Kile, and Carricke, ſhould prouide themſelues of victels for fiftéene daies, and to méet him at Beggar the tenth of June, to ride with him into the ſouthweſt parts of Scotland, to chaſtiſe certeine théeues, and other diſobedient perſons. Hereupon, the eleuenth of June, the regent marched forth of Edenburgh, and came that night to Beggar. The armie being aſſembled, conteined foure or fiue thouſand ſand horſſemen verie well appointed, beſide a thouſand footmen, gunners and halberdiers: of boies and yong men that went with the cartage, there were about foure thouſand.

The regents iournie into the ſouthweſt parts of Scotland.

The caſtell of Boghall, perteining to the lord Fleming, was ſurrendred to them. The twelfth of June Skirling caſtell was raced (a faire houſe) to the end that other vnderſtanding therof, might be put in greter feare. That night they came to Crawford, where the caſtell was to them ſurrendred; it belonged vnto ſir James Hamilton, whom they had in their hands. The thirtéenth of June they marched to Saucher, a caſtell, the which being rendred they ſpared, becauſe the lord Chreichton the owner thereof, promiſed at a certeine daie to come to the regent to Edenburgh. The fouretéenth of June they came to Barbacaſt, where they laie that night, and the lard Wederborne was ſent to ſpeake with the lard of Louchinware. Wedneſdaie the fiftéenth of June, they marched to a place called ſaint John Sclaghan, ſtaieng there in truſt of the lard of Louchinwares comming vnto them, but he came not: wherevpon, the nert daie being the ſirtéenth of June, they raced the houſe of Kenmure, and an other houſe alſo, for that the owners were frends to the ſaid Louchinware.

The ſeuentéenth of June they came to a gentlemans houſe, ſtanding by the water of Ur, where diuerſe gentlemen came in, and were receiued. The eightéenth of June they marched to Dunfreis, and remained there all the nert daie. A ſtrong houſe ſtanding in that towne, & apperteining to the lord Marwell, was offered vnto them. Diuerſe of the Marwels, Johnſtons, Yrewins, Grahams, and Bels, came vnto the regent, and offering themſelues to be obedient, were receiued. Two daies before this, the lord Marwell, the lards of Johnſton, Cowhill, and Louchinwar, had béene at Dunfreis with a thouſand men, and ſpent all the victels. It was thought that the lord Marwell would haue come in, if the other had not counſelled him to the contrarie. The twentith of June they marched to Hoddom, a place belonging to the lord Herries: a thouſand of the broken men were aſſembled and offered ſkirmiſh; two or thrée were taken, they laie within a mile of the regent that night.

The one and twentith the houſe was yeelded, and the cuſtodie thereof committed to the lard of Drumlanrig that was appointed warden of thoſe marches. It was thought verie ſtrong, ſo that the defendants might haue kept it longer if they had béene diſpoſed. Great hunger began to pinch the armie, a pint of wine was ſold at ſeuen ſhillings Scotiſh, and no bread to be had for anie monie. The regent ſent forth the earle of Morton, and the lord Hume with a thouſand men, to trie if they might haue drawen the broken men to a chaſe: but it would not be, for they went their waies, and would not tarrie it. The two and twentith of June the campe laie ſtill, but the regent with a thouſand men went to Annand, and had it deliuered vnto him. Héere he met with the lord Scrope, and after returned to the campe. The thrée and twentith of June they went to Lochmaben and receiued the caſtell, the which the regent deliuered to Drumlanrig: but ſome of the Marwels being cloſelie hid within an od corner of the houſe, after the regent was gone, brake out and ſeized the houſe againe into their hands.

The ſame daie, two houſes belonging to the lard of Johnſton, the one named Lochwood, and the other Lowhouſie, were taken, but not burnt: becauſe the lard Johnſton had put in ſuertie to come in by a day vnto the regent. The ſame daie they take great ſtore of cattell, and that night with a ſhot of the great artillerie, they ſlue two théeues among thrée ſcore of thers that came and approched verie néere to the armie, as the maner of the prickers is. The armie laie that night at Milton holms. The foure and twentith of June they came to Péeples, and the nert day to Edenburgh, ſo ending that iournie; in the which they had paſſed through the countries of Clideſdale, Gallowaie, Niddeſdale, Annandale, & Twédale. Much a do and great trouble aroſe within Scotland, by reaſon that the Hamiltons and their adherents made parts againſt the regent, and thoſe other lords that gouerned vnder the king; whereof as I haue no certeine notes, ſo I muſt paſſe the ſame with ſilence.

Great trouble in Scotland.

Fr. Thin. Buchan. lib. 19.

¶ Whileſt theſe things were thus in doing, letters came to the regent from the quéene of England: for ſhe was perſuaded by ſuch as were fled with the quéene of Scots into England, that there was great iniurie done vnto the quéene of Scots, being burdened with high matters, through the enuie of hir euill ſubiects, in which chiefle the kinglie authoritie was reuiled, and the regiment of ſacred maieſtie defaced. A thing which did not alone perteine to the priuat perſon of the quéene of Scots, but to the example of all other princes. Which euill of expelling kings, was ſpédilie and ſoundlie to be preuented, leaſt it might créepe anie further. By which and other perſuaſions, the quéene of England required of the regent to ſend ſufficient men, that ſhould declare to hir the order of all things as they were done, and that ſhould anſwer all ſuch reproches as were laied againſt him.

Touching which matter, although it appéered grieuous and heauie in it ſelfe, to call things in queſtion which before were by parlement eſtabliſhed; and to bring in vſe a new kind of iudgement of their cauſes before forren iudges and kings who were their enimies, and firſt perſuaded againſt the regent by ſuch as maliced him and his faction; and that after a ſort the ſame ſéemed dangerous and full of ſhame: yet on the other ſide there were manie things that inforced him to accept that requeſt of the quéene of England, although it were vniuſt. Wherefore when he had determined to ſend ambaſſadors, and that they could not agrée who they ſhould be, ſith the chiefeſt, and thoſe of the nobilitie refuſed it: at length the regent profeſſed that he would take that iournie vpon him. For the performance whereof he choſe certeine perſons to accompanie him into England, contrarie to the mind of William Metellan, which onelie denied and ſtood againſt it. Wherefore he carried the ſaid Metellan with him (fauoring the quéene) not doubting in the end by one meanes or other to win him to his part.

The reſt that went willinglie with him, were James Dowglas, Patrike Lindſete, being of the nobilitie; the biſhop of Orknie, & the abbat of Fernlindon, churchmen; James Macgill, and Henrie Balnaue, lawiers of the college of iudges. To whome as the ninth was ioined George Buchanan author of the Scotiſh hiſtorie: with whome the regent accompanied to the number of 100 horſſes, toke his iournie into England, and came the fourth nones of October to Yorke, to the aſſemblie appointed there by the quéene of England. On which day, and almoſt at the ſame houre, Thomas Howard duke of Northfolke came thither alſo; to which duke were aſſociat in commiſſion, to heare the controuerſie of the Scots, the earle of Suſſex, and ſir Rafe Sadler knight. After a few daies, came thither ſuch as were ſent by the quéene of Scots, which did complaine of hir vnkind ſubiects, and required helpe to reſtore hir to hir kingdome. Theſe men being heard (ſundered from the regent and the earls) did (after they had proteſted that they came not vnto them as iudges, hauing anie right to make lawes to bind bind them) with manie woꝛds open the iniuries which the Scotiſh ſubiects had done vnto their quæne, and required of the quæne of England, that either ſhe would perſuade hir vnkind people to receiue their pꝛince againe; oꝛ if they refuſed the ſame, that ſhe would giue them an armie, with which they might compell them thereunto.

In few hours after this, the regent (calling the matter to the deciding of law, beꝛore equall arbitratoꝛs) did contend (ſith nothing was done but by right, by law, by the ancient cuſtome of their countrie, by the determination of the aſſemblie of parlement, and by the ſubſcription of manie ſuch as were there pꝛeſent to accuſe them) that he alone by his authoꝛitie could not vndo the ſame: but when the Engliſh commiſſioners had denied that they could be ſatiſfied with thoſe things done at home, & here pꝛonounced by the Scots, except ſome cauſe were ſhewed that inforced them ſo ſeuerelie to pꝛonounce againſt their quæne; the regent anſwered that he did chieflie flæ that matter, leaſt he ſhould be driuen to accuſe his quæne and ſiſter. Which he denied to do, not willing to laie abꝛoad to foꝛren nations hir wicked deeds, as Buchanan tearmeth them. To the contrarie whereof he would not be inforced, vnleſſe the quæne of England would pꝛomiſe to defend the cauſe of the now king, and to take him into hir pꝛotection: if he did manifeſtlie pꝛoue, that the quæne of Scots had murthered the king of Scots hir huſband. Whereunto the Engliſh anſwered, that they had authoꝛitie onelie to heare both parts, and to declare their whole requeſt vnto their quæne.

By reaſon whereof, in the end they wꝛote to the quæne of England all the ſtate of their doings; who did wꝛite backe, that the earle of Murreie ſhould ſend one oꝛ moꝛe to the Engliſh court, fullie to informe hir thereof, ſith ſhe would do all therein that belonged vnto hir. Which letters receiued, the earle of Murreie ſent Petellan (a man beꝛore ſuſpected, and that did after ioine in conference with John Leſle biſhop of Roſſe) to the court of England, aſſociated with James Macgill. Now after theſe men were come to the quæne at London, it was thought moſt conuenient by hir and hir councell, that the regent himſelfe ſhould be pꝛeſent, when all matters of controuerſie were intreated vpon. Foꝛ which cauſe, ſending part of his companie backe into Scotland, the regent came with a ſmall traine to London: where the ſame difficultie was obiected againſt him which was done at Yoꝛke: to which he anſwered as beꝛore. Whilſt theſe things were doing at London, the quæne of Scots did by James Balfure moue warres in Scotland. Foꝛ the furtherance whereof, ſhe wꝛote letters to hirs and Bothwels friends, and made manie deputies to execute hir authoꝛitie in Scotland.

When the regent ſaw himſelfe thus beſet on euerie ſide, he determined to returne with all ſpæd into Scotland aſwell as he might, without diſpatch of that foꝛ which he came. Wherefoꝛe the Engliſh ſtill inſtantlie vꝛging him to tell the cauſe (which being vntold, they could not determine anie thing therein) that moued them to do thoſe things in Scotland: the regent (loth to offend the quæne of England) made a long pꝛotеſtation how vnwilling he was to accuſe the quæne, and his ſiſter; and therefoꝛe requeſted one thing, that they which were the occaſion to lead him into this battell might be pꝛeſent thereat, foꝛ becauſe he would vſe their witnes in the weighteſt matters. Which foꝛ manie great reaſons being denied by the Engliſh, the quæne of England required, that the quæne of Scots (by foꝛce and armes expelled) might be reſtoꝛed home; & therewithall giuing the regent a day, to ſhew cauſe whie the reuengers of the kings death had taken armes againſt the quæne; although the erle of Murreie were none of them: foꝛ he was in France at the time of the dæd done. Wherefoꝛe the regent ſhewing all he could againſt the quæne of Scots foꝛ the defenſe of hir aduerſaries; in the end, the quæne of England deferring the ſame to another day, permitted the regent to depart home to appeaſe the troubles there, and that he ſhould leaue ſome one of his behind him, to anſwere all ſuch euils as ſhould be obiected againſt him.

But the regent deſired them whileſt he was there, that his accuſoꝛs might be bꝛought out. Whereupon the accuſoꝛs being pꝛeſent, and ſaieng that they had not then anie thing to ſaie; but that they would further ſhew their accuſation where it pleaſed the quæne: the matter with much controuerſie ended on both parts, & the councell bꝛake vp without anie finall ſentence therin. But whileſt the regent remained thus in England (as is a little beꝛore touched) there were manie things without ſucceſſe attempted by the quæne of Scots followers. Foꝛ James Hamilton (who a little beꝛore had bæne gouernoꝛ) being grieued with the miſhap of things at home, falling out contrarie vnto his mind, did therefoꝛe depart into France, where (remoued from all companie, and onelie attended vpon with a man oꝛ two) he did ſecretlie liue to himſelfe.

But when the quæne of Scots was eſcaped the pꝛiſon of Lochleuin, and that ſhe was after ſubdued in battell, being within a few daies after compelled to land in England; the Frenchmen that could not dꝛaw the earle of Murreie (now by his friends called home into his countrie) into their faction, thought it beſt foꝛ manie reaſons (ſith they might not foꝛ the troubles in France ſend him ſuccoꝛ oꝛ monie) to raiſe vp the ſaid Hamilton againſt the earle of Murreie, and eſpeciallie at that time whileſt the regent was in England. Wherefoꝛe he comming out of his den abꝛode into the woꝛld, inriched by the French with a few golden crownes, and ouercharged with manie faire pꝛomiſes, was impoꝛtuned by his friends and kinred, whileſt he haſtened from England into Scotland, that the quæne of England with the authoꝛitie of the quæne of Scots, would induce the earle of Murreie to deliuer vp his regentſhip of Scotland vnto him; ſith that place was of right due vnto him (by the maners and lawes of all nations, but chiefelie by the cuſtome of his countrie) as neereſt in bloud, and next in ſucceſſion.

Foꝛ the pꝛoſe whereof, it is not neceſſarie to reckon vp the memoꝛie of hiſtoꝛies from the firſt times, conſidering it is knowne to all men, that gouernoꝛs haue bæne giuen to thoſe of yong yeares (not able to rule the kingdome) of ſuch as haue bæne neereſt of bloud. Foꝛ ſo, after the death of James the third, Robert his vncle had the gouernement in the abſence of James the firſt; and Murdac the ſon of the ſame Robert ſucceeded him therein. And of late time in our remembꝛance, John duke of Albanie did gouerne the yong yeares of James the fift; and Hamilton himſelfe, in the minoꝛitie of Marie the quæne that now is, being as then neither fit foꝛ a huſband oꝛ a kingdome, did a few yeares rule all the affaires of Scotland. Who now by certeine rebels, was through vnlawfull voices excluded thereof with foꝛce and violence, and that (which is woꝛſe) a baſtard is aduanced thereunto in contempt of lawfull bloud. Which honoꝛ, if it were reſtoꝛed vnto him, he would ſhoꝛtlie appeaſe all thoſe ciuill bꝛalles, and reſtoꝛe the quæne of Scots vnto hir kingdome, without anie foꝛce oꝛ tumult of armes.

Whereunto the king of Scots legats did anſwer, that Hamilton did not onelie demand a thing quite contrarie contrarie to the lawes and old cuſtoms of Scotland; but alſo a thing moſt vniuſt, if no authoritie of law were againſt it. For our anceſtors (by reaſon of many murthers committed by thoſe of the kings bloud) almoſt a thouſand three hundred yeares paſt, did change the order in creating of their kings. For whereas before, they which were of the familie of Fergulius, the firſt king of that name, were in the life of the king choſen after to reigne, not as neereſt of bloud; but as perſons moſt worthie to weild a kingdome: Kenneth the third (to the end to take awaie from the court all treacherie towards the kings familie, and cruell murthers of kinreds amongeſt themſelues) did eſtabliſh that order which is now obſerued in creating of our kings; which was, that the nert in bloud ſhould be aduanced to the place of the deceaſſed king.

But afterwards, when men were taught by the ſucceſſe of things, that it could ſcarſe be choſen; but that in ſuch inconſtancie of fortune, the right of the chiefeſt magiſtrat muſt ſometime light vpon children and vpon heires alſo vnfit for gouernement, they did ordeine, that he ſhould be choſen to the adminiſtration of the publike wealth; which did excell others in wealth and wiſedome. Which courſe our anceſtors haue kept almoſt theſe ſix hundred yeares, leauing the kingdome whole & ſound to poſteritie. According to the which, when Robert Bruſe was dead, there were gouernors choſen by voices: which were Thomas Randolph earle of Murreie, Donald earle of Mar, Andrew Murreie, John Randolph, & Robert Steward. For ſometime, as manie were choſen gouernors togither; ſo when James the ſecond was a child, Alexander Leuingſton, being no kin to the king, no not ſo much as of the nobilitie, but onelie a knight, was appointed gouernor to the yong king.

Which may not be excuſed, in ſaieng that the ſame was then ſo done, becauſe there wanted men of the kings bloud to ſupplie thoſe places. For at that time were liuing John Kennedie head of the familie, the kings kinſman by the ſiſter of James the firſt; and the vncle by his fathers ſide: James Kennedie alſo, biſhop of ſaint Andrews, a man of moſt account in the kingdome for all kinds of vertue, being borne of the kings aunt: and Dowglas alſo, earle of Angus, with Archembald earle of Dowglas, both of the kings bloud; whereof the laſt was in riches and power almoſt equall to the king, but far beyond the wealth and power of all others; of whome, none did euer complaine to the parlement, when they were put beſides the gouernement, and others not ſo neere of bloud appointed therevnto. Not long after, foure tutors were appointed to James the third, which were not made in reſpect of bloud; but choſen by the voices of the nobilitie.

And although of late, John duke of Albanie was by the nobilitie called out of France to the gouernment of Scotland, during the tender yeares of James the firſt, and confirmed in the ſame by publike decree of parlement; yet was it not giuen vnto him in reſpect of neereneſſe of bloud. For he had Alexander his elder brother in life, who although perhaps he was inferior to the duke; yet he was farre aboue James Hamilton (in all kind of vertue) which did ſometimes reach after that place. But in the abſence of James the firſt, Robert his vncle ruled the kingdome. But by what right? Was he admitted therevnto for neereneſſe of bloud? No trulie.

What then? Was he choſen of the people? No. How then was he made? Marie when king Robert the third was not ſufficient to rule the kingdome, either for ſtrength of bodie or mind, he did ſubſtitute Robert his brother as his deputie, & commended his children to his gouernment; who in the end famiſhed Dauid the eldeſt, and alſo threatened death vnto the yonger ſonne James, which he did auoid by fleeing Scotland. Which Robert being in the poſſeſſion of authoritie by tyrannie (and his brother killed with thought) did leaue the ſame to Murdac his ſonne. So that it cannot be doubted what the mind of the laſt king Robert was to his brother, for he would neuer (if he had liued and beene in health) haue made him tutor of his children, whom at the houre of his death he curſſed as the butcher of his children.

That time alſo, in which this Hamilton gouerned, doth remember vnto vs manie things (though what ſoeuer was then done, is no proofe that it was well done) which are to be conſidered of. For when the cardinall Beton did labor by ſubtiltie to inuade the chiefe gouernement, this Hamilton rather leaning to the hatred which good men did beare towards Beton, than truſting to the fauor of the people towards himſelfe, did leape into the emptie place of a gouernor; in which he ruled with much crueltie and couetouſneſſe, and in few yeares after, both ſold the gouernment (obteined by force) and the queene, whom he had vnder his authoritie. At what time was ſhewed the fauour which the people bare vnto him, when they preferred the gouernement of a ſtrange woman, before the bondage which they had vnder him.

You ſee now (I hope) the requeſt of the Hamiltons to be againſt our countrie lawes, and decrees of our anceſtors, and that ſo contrarie vnto them, that wanting other ſufficient arguments, he is conſtreined to confirme the ſame onelie with lies. But if there were anie ſuch cuſtome, I ſuppoſe there is none but doth ſee how vniuſt it were. For what can be more vnrightfull, than to commit yong, weake, and faultleſſe yeeres to his faith, which doth dailie either looke or wiſh for the death of the pupill? Whoſe whole familie hath alwaies beene at daillie and deadlie warre with the houſe of the king that now is? What defenſe can be here by neereneſſe of bloud againſt old malice, vnmeaſurable couetouſneſſe, and the headie violence of (alreadie taſted) tyrannie? Laodice the queene of Cappadocia is ſuppoſed to haue killed hir owne children, as they came to yeers of diſcretion, and to haue bought the ſmall continuance of hir gouernement with the bloud of hir ſonnes.

Wherefore, if the mother ſpared not hir owne fleſh, for the gaine of ſhort authoritie; what will old enimies do, inflamed to crueltie with the brands of couetouſneſſe (nay rather what is to be thought that they will not do) againſt a child, which deferreth effect of their hope of gouernement? If this example ſeeme ouer old or obſcure to anie man, or to be ouer farre fet, I will lay downe ſome neerer home, and thoſe moſt notable. Who is ſo ignorant of this latelie done, that he knoweth not that Galeas Sforcia (growne to diſcretion, a huſband, and ſonne in law to a moſt mightie king) was ſlaine by his vncle Lodowike? Or to whom are the calamities vnknowne, which followed ſo cruell a parricide and kin-ſlaier? For the moſt beautifull countrie of Italie was almoſt brought thereby to vtter deſtruction: the familie of the Sforcies, the mother of manie a valiant perſon cleane deſtroied, and the barbarous people (from whoſe crueltie and couetouſneſſe nothing was ſafe) brought into the pleaſant places about Padus. Who is he that is borne in Britaine, that hath not heard of the crueltie of Richard (the third king of that name in England) againſt the children of his brother? But with what bloudſhed was that in the end purged?

Now, ſith theſe did not feare to do ſuch euils to their their nereſt bloud, by the onelie inforcing deſire to gouerne, being otherwiſe worthie perſons: what ſhall we loke for from him, whoſe inconſtancie of mind all the Scots do know? Whoſe vnſkilfull gouernement they haue tried with manie ſlaughters? And (which is more) whoſe familie not content with the murther of this kings great grandfather, did go about to intrap his grandfather by the mothers ſide, whileſt he was in life; and when he could not kill the grandfather by the fathers ſide, he thruſt the poore father out of the kingdome, brought forth the mother to be ſlaine as a ſacrifice, & ſold hir kingdome (when they could not inioy it) to ſtrangers: out of which bondage ſhe (by the prouidence of God) being deliuered, they haue throwne themſelues into theſe troubles in which they now are. Whereby we may eaſilie vnderſtand, what the iudgement of the common people was touching that matter; in that thoſe men do now ſeeme to be deliuered out of a priſon of miſerable bondage, and to behold the ſweet light of libertie, when they (which knew not how to order it) did ſell their gouernment to a ſtrange woman.

These things being thus heard on both ſides before the councell of England, the queene thereof by hir ſaid councell declared to Hamilton, that he required an vnluſt thing, and that he ſhould not hope for anie aid from hir; and that ſhe hath promiſed the kings ambaſſador, that Hamilton ſhould not depart England, before that the ſaid ambaſſador had leaue likewiſe to go home. After that theſe things were done, and that the regent ſomewhat indifferentlie diſpatched his affairs in England, he obteined leaue to depart, and was honorablie conducted home with the Engliſh, who ſufficientlie garded him: but eſpeciallie the nobilitie and companie of the north parts, ſith it was great honor for hir maieſtie ſafelie to returne him home, who (vpon hir letters had) was come out of his owne countrie. Which regent comming to Edenburgh the nert day after the kalends of Februarie, hee was there receiued with great pompe.

Buchanan. lib. 19.

Few daies after this, thoſe of the kings faction aſſembled at Striueling, where the regent declared vnto them what he had done in England; which being well liked, was in the end confirmed by all the nobilitie. Much about that time, James Hamilton chiefe of that familie came out of England, being by the queene of Scots authoriſed with a new and arrogant letter: in that ſhe called him hir father, and made him hir vicar and deputie of the kingdome. This man at his firſt comming made proclamation, that no man ſhould obeie anie other than ſuch as were ſubſtituted by him. Whereupon thoſe of the kings part (beſtowing ſummes of monie vpon ſouldiers, to make them readie, if need required, to the vttermoſt conflict) met on a day appointed at Glaſcow.

But when there was a great aſſemblie of the common people at Hamilton, more than they looked for, a meanes of agreement was attempted, with this condition: that Hamilton, comming to Glaſcow, ſhould acknowledge the king for chiefeſt gouernor: which if he did, all other things ſhould eaſilie be agreed; but if he denied that, he ſhuld come in vaine: all which he promiſed to do, and the kings armie was diſmiſſed. When he came to Glaſcow, they obteined their former goods and honors the ſame day, in which he and his friends profeſſed themſelues ſubiects to the king: but yet ſo, that in the meane time they ſhould remaine in priſon, or elſe giue pledges of their nert kin; with further notice, that if anie of the ſaid part would ſo do, they ſhould alſo be receiued on the ſame couenants, whereunto the earle of Argile and the earle Huntleie refuſed to ſubſcribe.

Hamilton comming at the day appointed to Edenburgh, did deferre the performance of his promiſes, deuiſing manie delaies; vntill the other principall of the factions were come, whereby the couenants might be eſtabliſhed by all their conſents, for which he praied day till the tenth of Maie: and that in the meane time he might vnderſtand the mind of the impriſoned queene of Scots: all which in the end was denied vnto him. Whereupon Hamilton (confeſſing the truth) ſaid, that he conſented to thoſe conditions by compulſion; and that (if he were free) hee would not allow of anie of them. For which anſwer, Hamilton & Maxwell were committed priſoners to the caſtell of Edenburgh. The earle of Argile was ſuffered to be quiet at home, but the earle Huntleie was more harolie dealt withall, becauſe that in the abſence of the gouernor he had taken manie, and had made deputies about Crawford and Ogilvie.

Whereupon there was day giuen vnto them both to meet at the aſſemblie at ſaint Andrews, whither the earle of Argile firſt came: with whom there was no extreme dealing, becauſe he ceaſed to trouble the realme anie more, was of kinred to the gouernor, and they two were of great friendſhip togither euen from their young yeers. But when the cauſe of Huntleie (long before his comming) was well debated, the gouernor pronounced, that he would pardon all priuate faults done to him, or to the king: but that hee neither could nor would pardon anie iniuries done to any other. And if Huntleie, or his friends that followed his faction, could paſſe away with thoſe ſpoils, he would willinglie labor that arbitrators choſen by both parts, ſhould temper the value of the damage. At what time alſo there grew a further miſchiefe, whether all they which tooke part with Huntleie ſhuld alſo be pardoned; but in the end, vpon deliberation, all things ſeemed indifferentlie well pacified.

During theſe things, the queene of England ſent letters into Scotland in the behalfe of the impriſoned queene; either that ſhe might wholie be reſtored, or iointlie rule with hir ſonne; or admitted to liue priuatlie in hir owne countrie. All which being denied to be granted, the Scots ſent Robert Petcarne, a man of great wiſedome and fidelitie, to deliuer their anſwer vnto the queene of England. Whileſt theſe things were in doing, the gouernor fearing the power of the impriſoned queene, which now waxed great, did call William Mettellan before him, from Perth to Striueling; who requeſted the earle of Argile to go with him for his better ſuertie. Afterwards, this William ſitting in the councell, was accuſed by Thomas Crawford of the kings death, whereupon he was commanded priſoner to a chamber in the caſtell, and others were ſent to apprehend James Balfurie.

Buchanan. lib. 19.

But in the end, the gouernors mildneſſe ſuffered no great hurt to fall vpon them; for Balfurie by his friends ſome obteined pardon; and Mettellan being led to Edenburgh, was left in a houſe there not farre from the caſtell: to whome certeine horſſemen were appointed keepers, vnder the charge of Alexander Hume a noble young man, appointed chiefe ouer them. But William Kircadie, capteine of the caſtell of Edenburgh, about ten of the clocke at night, did counterfeit letters ſigned with the hand of the earle of Murreie, and brought them to Alexander, willing him to deliuer William Mettellan, which he did accordinglie. Whereupon Mettellan was caried by Kircadie into the caſtell, to the great miſlike of the nobilitie, being almoſt vncerteine whether they ſhould impute the deed to Kircandie, or to the gouernor, not being vnacquainted with the boldneſſe of Kircadie: in ſuch ſort, that the ſame was like to grow to a commotion, if the innocencie

of the gouernour had not before béene ſufficientlie knowne.

1569. Rebellion in the north of England, by the earles of Northumberland & Weſtmerland.

In the yære 1569, the earles of Northumberland and Weſtmerland raiſed a rebellion againſt the quænes maieſtie of England; but by the good diligence and prouident circumſpection of the earle of Suſſex, then lieutenant of the north parts, and by ſuch direction as was giuen by hir maieſtie and hir councell, for the leuieng of an armie vnder the leading of the earle of Warwike, and the lord admerall Clinton, the ſaid two earles were kept ſo in feare, that they durſt not aduance farre forward in their wicked begun enterprize, but were conſtreined to retire backe towards Durham. Whervpon the earle of Suſſex, ſuppoſing that their meaning was for their laſt refuge and ſafegard to take the caſtels of Alnewike and Warkeworth, he wrote vnto ſir John Forſter lord warden of the middle marches, either by force, policie, or ſome other means, to get into his hands the poſſeſſion of thoſe two caſtels, and the ſame to fortifie with ſuch number and gariſons of men, as to his diſcretion ſhould be thought conuenient, for the ſafe cuſtodie and gard thereof.

Sir John Forſter, being at his houſe nære to Alnewike, when he receiued theſe letters, accompanied with his ſeruants, friends, and tenants, & ſome ſouldiers that were come to him from Berwike, marched vp to the caſtell on foot, where finding the houſe garded with a great number of the earle of Northumberlands ſeruants, reteiners, and tenants, he made proclamation before the caſtell gate, that euerie of them within the caſtell ſhould come forth, and withdraw to their owne houſes, vpon paine to be reputed rebels to the quænes maieſtie: and that which of them ſoeuer did refuſe to obeie this proclamation, ſtaieng either in the caſtell or elſewhere in anie vnlawfull aſſemblie, it ſhould be lawfull for euerie man to ſpoile his goods, and him to kill if he made reſiſtance.

Proclamation made at Alnewike by ſir Jo. Forſter.

This proclamation notwithſtanding, they within the caſtell, at the firſt refuſed to yéeld it vp. And therevpon ſir John Forſter marched through the towne into the market place, and there made the like proclamation in behalfe of all the inhabitants that were the earle of Northumberlands tenants, for their repairing home to their houſes. And comming herewith backe towards the caſtell, they within perceiuing themſelues deſtitute of ſuccor, and ſir John Forſter to increaſe in power, did vpon better aduiſe yéeld themſelues vnto him, who ſaued all their liues. After the ſame maner he got alſo the caſtell of Warkeworth, and fortified them both with ſufficient number of men. This done, he aſſembled ſuch forces as he was able to make, ſo that he got together to the number of eleuen hundred horſſemen, and toke order to forlaie and ſtop the paſſages, ſo as the earles friends and tenants in Northumberland ſhould not go vnto him.

The caſtell of Alnewike and Warkeworth fortified by ſir Jo. Forſter.

Sir John Forſter kéepeth Newcaſtell againſt the rebels.

Sir Henrie Perſie againſt his brother the earle of Northumberland.

After this, hauing in his companie the lord Ogle, and Thomas Forſter his brother, and other gentlemen, he went to Newcaſtell, where, with Thomas Gower eſquire, that had the principall rule therof at that time, he toke order for the defenſe of that towne againſt the rebels. Hither came to him ſir Henrie Perſie, offering his ſeruice againſt his brother, and other the rebels, to the vttermoſt of his power. Herevpon diuerſe excurſions were made forth of Newcaſtell into the biſhoprike, where the two earles were incamped, and ſundrie ſkirmiſhes chanced betwixt the two parties, though no great hurt followed thereof. The erles yet on a day came from Durham, and with their armie marched towards Newcaſtell. Sir John Forſter, and ſir Henrie Perſie, hauing intelligence thereof, iſſued forth of Newcaſtell with all their forces, and certeine péces of great ordinance. They had alſo with them certeine bands of the ſouldiers of Berwike, meaning verelie to haue ioined battell with the earles: ſir Henrie Perſie ſhewing himſelfe as willing and forward thereto as anie other in all the companies.

At Cheſter deane, midwaie betwixt Durham and Newcaſtell, the armies approched the one nære to the other, a ſmall broke running in a hollow diuiding them aſunder, ſo that there was no paſſage for them to conueie their ordinance ouer, the bankes on either ſide being ſo ſkéepe and cumberſome. Wherevpon the erles, perceiuing that they were diſappointed of their purpoſe, after ſome ſkirmiſhes betwixt the horſſemen, they returned vnto Durham: and from thence the next day they went to Yerham, and after being in vtter deſpaire, fled into Scotland: where the erle of Weſtmerland lighted among thoſe that ſhifted him awaie ſo from place to place, that he eſcaped out of that realme, when he could no longer remaine there in ſuertie. But the earle of Northumberland fell into their hands, which deliuered him vnto the regent, who thought he could do no leſſe than put him in ſafe kéeping, conſidering the amitie that was betwixt the two princes, the quænes maieſtie of England, and the king of Scots.

Cheſter deane.

But ſhortlie after, the regent (as he was riding through Lithquo) was wickedlie ſhot in with an harquebuſe, by one James Hamilton, and ſo wounded, that the next day he died of the hurt [as ſaith Buchanan out of a wood gallerie, in which were clothes hanged as it were to an other vſe.] ✠ But the night before the ſlaughter of the regent, Walter Scot, and Thomas Kar alſo of Fernihirſt entered into England to ſpoile the borders, which they did more cruellie than euer was done before, rather for deſire of reuenge of ſome iniurie, than for the gaine of anie boties. Beſides which, the capteine of the caſtell where Pettellan was priſoner, was now commanded to ſet the ſame Pettellan at libertie: who vpon oth before the nobilitie (which allowed and confirmed the ſame) did purge himſelfe of the death of the king, and of the ciuill warres moued in England (wherewith he was charged) adding that he would proue the ſame at anie time when day ſhould be appointed to him therefore. After which, there was an aſſemblie made for the election of a new gouernour.

1571. Buch. 1570. The earle of Murrcie lord regent ſlaine. Fr. Thin.

Buchan. lib. 20.

At what time Thomas Randolph, being ſent thither ambaſſador for the quæne of England in the life of the regent, had audience granted vnto him; whoſe meſſage was, to demand the deliuerie of ſuch rebels of England as had fled thither: which ambaſſador the deceaſſed gouernour had before refuſed to heare at Striueling. Wherevpon, ſith all things were then in a turmoile by his death, they departed. But now, when there was a parlement for the chooſing of a new regent, Randolph which had béene in Scotland ſome yéeres before, becauſe he ſæmed beſt to know the men and their conditions of Scotland, and bicauſe he had before diſpatched ſome other ambaſſages for the benefit of the realme, was held déere and well eſtéemed of the nobilitie, and therfore was brought into the councell.

Who, after that he had declared what the mind of his prince had béene vnto the Scots, he ſhewed that ſhe would not now abbate the ſame vnto them in theſe troubleſome times, no more than ſhe had before done. After which he remembred the inuaſions made into England, with the ſlaughters, ſpoiles, and burnings committed a little before: all which he well knew was not done by the counſell or labor of the publike ſtate: and therefore his quænes fauor was not diminiſhed to them, but that the ſame good will did remaine to them now, as ample as euer it was. And where she was grieuouslie offended (and that without hir desert) yet she was not now determined (although by right she iustlie might) to demand publike restitution and recompense for such euils: nor to exact punishment of the whole nation for the misdoing of a few.

For she was not ignorant what tumults and troubles of all things was of late raised amongest them. Notwithstanding this euill, she did not yet anie whit doubt of the fauor of the good and vertuous men vnto hir: and that she would not onlie for their cause separate the offense from the publike consent: but also (if they themselues for the domesticall seditions could not inforce the disturbers of the quiet to make restitution of such spoiles) that she would ioine hir power with them, to the end by common counsell they might take iust punishment vpon the truce-breakers. Which if they could not then do by that meanes, that yet she would prosecute those iniuries with hir owne people, whose armie should without anie damage to them passe through such places as would be quiet, and take no reuenge vpon anie that were not guiltie of that iniurie. The rest of the parts of his ambassage did conteine admonitions alwaies profitable in all lawfull assemblies, but most necessarie for the present state of Scotland.

Whereof the first aduise was for the defense of religion, with an especiall care & diligence therein: sith the same alone doth teach vs the forme of our dutie, and peace towards God, our prince, our equall & christian neighbors. For no common-wealth diuided in it selfe can long continue: for which cause they must chiefle labor with all their power, with might and maine, with saile and ores, that peace and quiet maie be holilie and vertuouslie nourished at home amongest their people. For sith God the creator of all things, hath imparted a kinglie gouernement ouer this nation, it is iust and meet that they obeie their princes; and in dutifull sort bestow all honor, reuerence, and obedience vpon them; sith peace, concord, amitie, and loue, with all men (as much as in vs lieth to vse) is most acceptable to God, and doth take awaie (or at the least hinder) the thirst and shedding of mens blood, a fault which God of all others doth most hate.

Which vnitie increasing the wealth of euerie one, maketh all nations more fearefull to their enimies, and is the preseruer of iustice: whose chiefe part consisting in punishing the euill, is especiallie to be imbraced: when contrarilie dissention and treason is a thing most detestable to all lawfull gouernement: sith such kind of people are to be pursued with all extremitie, and not be succored with anie fauor, with anie mercie, or with anie pardon, into what countrie soeuer they flee for refuge of their hated wickednesse. All these things did Randolph both godlie and wiselie admonish vs of, and iustlie and modestlie require from vs.

But because there was no regent chosen for the supreme gouernement, there could no certeine answer be giuen thereunto: for which cause he was for that time put backe to the kalends of Maie. At last, William and James Dowglasse, brothers of the slaine regent by one mother, were heard in this parlement, who required that the vnworthie death of their brother might be reuenged, sith the same was taken awaie not for anie priuat grudge, but for the common-wealths cause. Upon the opening whereof men were of diuerse opinions about his death, though they all agreed that the offendors should be punished: for some would haue a day giuen to such as were suspected of the murther: for the names of manie persons were there shewed to answer the same. But it better pleased other not to wait for anie appointed day of law to be giuen to them, who had alreadie taken armes with violence to defend that deed which they had alreadie done; & that they should not onelie raise their weapons against them, but also against all such as were condemned in that assemblie of the nobilitie.

To which opinion all the knights and souldiors did some agree, who yet could not hold their determination, especiallie sith the earle of Atholl and Morton did dissuade them from it: whereof the first would haue them tarrie, vntill there were a greater assemblie of the nobilitie: and the other supposed that it would come to passe, that if they ioined manie faults in one, that the reuenge of the regent would perish and come to nothing, and the matter would burst out to ciuill wars, wherby all they that feared peace, would flee to the part of such as were guiltie of the murther. Wherefore their faults were to be diuided, and (if it were possible) to treat of them by law, and that nothing should be done or changed vntill the kalends of Maie, on which there was an assemblie or parlement appointed.

Upon which persuasion the companie was dissolued, though the greatest part of the nobilitie did condemne this delate, as moued thervnto: because that the other would saie that all things were done at the becke of the kings enimies, who had thus protracted the time, to the end that the malice of the death of this regent might by little and little vanish in the meane time, and the aduerse faction gather greater power togither. Which opinion of the common people was confirmed by manie things that went before, and manie things which followed. For presentlie (before the death of the regent was fullie spread abroad) James Hamilton (mortgaging his lands to John Summeruill of Cantrethame) borrowed monie thereof: with which, and with other monie taken vp of the rest of his friends, he sent to his fauorers (to hire souldiors) being warned before, that they should alwaies be readie at all times, and for all causes which should happen by the taking awaie of their deadlie enimie, the earle of Murreie: neither after that time did the quenes factions ceasse from meeting in diuerse distant places.

On the fifteenth kalends of March, there did assemble the chiefe of the rebellious faction (for by that name and epitheton doth Buchanan alwaies terme those that toke the quenes part) to deuise of their affaires. At what time the earle of Argile, and the lord Boid did write vnto earle Morton, that they would willinglie (sith they did not yet know who killed the regent, and who were consenting thervnto) consult with the other nobilitie about the same matter, both to search out and to punish the same: and that they would not come to Edenburgh about that matter. But if the kings faction would be so persuaded, they would willinglie come to Lithquo, to Faukirke, or to Striueling, there to meet with them. Whervpon, the earle of Morton, consulting with Metellan about the same (for so it was desired in the letters) in the end it came to no effect. At the same time, Thomas Bar wrote to Limuch (to vse Buchanans word) to the gardian of the castell, to see if he could obteine of the quene of England to staie hir armie: which if he brought to passe, that then he would take such order, that he would easilie pacifie the borders without anie further trouble, and that they should remaine in that dutie which they were wont: but if she did refuse this condition, he would continue in his attempt, not doubting but the good subiects would shew their obedience towards their imprisoned quene, & would ioine themselues togither, because aid would shortlie come out of France vnto them.

On

On the fift nones of March, the Hamiltons, the earle of Argile, and Boid came to Lithquo; but the murther of one hired ſouldio; did trouble all their deuiſe by a ſudden tumult that was raiſed therevpon. Wherefore the nert day after the archbiſhop of ſaint Andrewes did bring the Hamiltons home, the reſt of the quéenes faction, eſpecialliе the earles of Huntleie, Atholl, Crawford, and the lords Ogiluie, Hume, Seton, and Petellan, met at Edenburgh: in which the earle Morton was accompanied with a ſmall traine, vntill the earles of Glencarne and Mar were come with their retinue. The fourth nones of March the chiefe of the factions met togither to conſult of the eſtate of things; but the ſame did proceed verie ſlowlie, by reaſon of the abſence of the earle of Argile, whoſe power and authoritie was then verie great.

This man did Huntleie ſeeke to perſuade to ioine with the reſt of the faction; but he returned without doing anie thing (as it was ſuppoſed by moſt men) through the ſubtilitie of Petellan, which would haue things long deferred, that more conuenient meane might be had in that troubleſome ſtate of the kingdome, for the innouation of things. The greateſt thing done in this aſſembling, was the argument for the choiſe of a new gouernor, which (as it ſeemeth) came to no effect. Now when all theſe aſſemblies tended to little purpoſe, thoſe of the quéenes faction returned to ſowe ſedition by procuring Engliſh warres, thereby to draw the common-people to aſſiſt their part. Wherefore they ſend the capteine (that beſore had done the like) afreſh at this time to execute the ſame; who left nothing vndone that might tend to extreme cruelitie.

During which, the heads of the faction do reproch the quéene of England, and ſlander the nobilitie of Scotland, as though they were the clients and followers of the Engliſh; further threatning abroad in euerie place, that they would vſe the aid of the French and Spaniſh, if the lord of the congregation prated in aid of the Engliſh. Much about that time, (as it were by chance) landed (out of France) at Dunbreton, Meriacke, one of the chamber to the French king, which aduanced the mindes of the quéenes faction, with manie large promiſes: by meanes whereof the Hamiltons appointed an aſſemblie of their people at Lithquo the firſt ides of Aprill.

At which day, when a great aſſemblie was made of the quéenes faction, they began there openlie to treat of thoſe things which before were whiſpered in ſecret: which was, that the death of the king and regent might be either forgotten, or at leaſt war cold in the publike turmoile of the realme, by making warre vpon the Engliſh. After which conſultation, they determined to go to Edenburgh the third ides of Aprill, there (beſides manie other commodities which might grow to them by that place) to ioine vnto them the citizens, by whom there was great helpe of good ſucceſſe to be receiued. Which they thought they might eaſilie bring about, by reaſon that William Kircadie was gouernor both of the caſtell and towne, againſt which deuiſe the citizens did yet contend. But in the end, with hard conditions, the quéenes part was admitted into the towne. After which, not thus contented, they perſuaded the citizens to deliuer vp the keies of their towne, which they moſt wiſelie refuſed.

All this while there was a great reſort to Petellan then lieng of the gowt, for which cauſe his houſe was commonlie called the ſchoolehouſe, and himſelfe the ſchoolemaiſter. In which meane time, the earle of Atholl did not ſpare to trauell hither and thither, to draw thoſe of the other faction to that aſſemblie at Edenburgh. But they would not come thither at all, vntill the kalends of Maie (which was a day appointed for the parlement) vnleſſe they knew ſome iuſt neceſſitie which might preuent that day: and then if there happened anie thing of moment, which might not ſuffer anie delaie, they would communicate the ſame to the earle Morton, whoſe houſe was but foure mile from thence, & he ſhould giue other knowledge thereof. In the end, a day was appointed by the earle of Atholl, in which a few of both factions ſhould méet at the towne of the earle Morton, called Dalkeith, which place did not like the quéenes faction, whoſe ſtrength was much holpen by ſuch priſoners as Kircadie had ſet at libertie out of the caſtell of Edenburgh.

But all the deuiſes and helps of the quéens faction were quailed, by the rumor of the Engliſh armie comming to Berwike. Whereupon, Alexander Hume, and John Harwell latelie deliuered out of priſon, without anie publike authoritie, or leaue to ſet them free, went home to defend their owne poſſeſſions; and a portion of that monie, which they had gathered to hire ſouldiers, was giuen to the ſaid lord Hume, to ſtrengthen his caſtell of Hume. Thomas Kar, and Walter Scot (who were iudged to haue made ſome roads into England by the perſuaſion of the biſhop of ſaint Andrews, whereby wars ſhould riſe in England) being forſaken of thoſe which inhabited nere the ſe places, & fearing their owne eſtate, ſent vnto the chiefe of the faction, requeſting helpe of them: or if they would not do ſo, that at leaſt they ſhould come to Lowther the nert towne; and from thence ſhew or make warre vpon England. Which when they could not obteine (nor anie of the publike monie) they forthwith departed to their owne lands in great anger.

After this, whileſt manie other things paſſed, as that the quéens faction ſent an ambaſſador to the earle of Suſſex, to ſtaie his iournie into Scotland; that they alſo ſent letters to the quéene of England concerning their cauſe; and that a ſeruant of monſieur Lauſac in France, had brought letters to the quéens factions (with thanks for their fidelitie) directed alſo vnto other that were indifferent, to ioine with the impriſoned quéene; and that he promiſed them aid out of France; and that the quéens people were aſſured, that the kings part would come to Edenburgh at the kalends of Maie: after all theſe things (I ſay) they of the quéens ſide departed to Lithquo, ſuppoſing that place moſt commodious to aſſemble their confederats. Whither when the Hamiltons and their clients were come, they beſet all the way to Edenburgh: for when they vnderſtood that John Areſkin earle of Mar was comming thither, they laid ambuſhes vnder the nert hils to intrap him.

But he knowing the iniurie of the place, paſſed the riuer two miles aboue, and came to Edenburgh the third day of Maie about euening. Shortlie after, the kings part remaining at Edenburgh, and the quéens at Lithquo, the three earls, Arran, Argile, and Huntleie appoint a parlement at Lithquo, the three nones of Auguſt. The other faction ſent Robert Petcarne ambaſſador to the quéene of England, to intreat with hir about the ſuppreſſion of the common enimie; and further to let hir vnderſtand, that ſuch were the good minds of the Scots vnto hir, that they would chooſe a regent by hir appointment.

Beſides which, the ſaid lords of the kings part with generall conſent wrote letters vnto the erle of Lennor, then remaining in England, to repaire home with all conuenient ſpéed into Scotland. ¶ Ye maie read in the hiſtorie of England, in what ſort the erle of Suſſex lord lieutenant of the north parts, entring into Tiuidale the ſeuen & twentith of Aprill, burnt the Mosse towèr, the towne of Crawling, the castell of Fernitherst, the towne of Howike, and the castell of Brauxton, that belonged to the laird of Buclewgh, with diuerse other castels, piles, towns, villages, and hamlets belonging to the lairds of Fernitherst, Buclewgh, and others in those parts: also how the lord Scrope inuaded the west borders of Scotland at the same time: and likewise how the said earle of Sussex wan the castell of Hume, with diuerse other matters which here I passe ouer, referring you to the said historie.

The earle of Lennox sent forward to returne into Scotland.

But now about the same time, the earle of Lennox, hauing got licence of the quæne of England to make his returne into Scotland, was set forward, and came to Berwike towards the latter end of Aprill, where being visited with sickenesse, he remained by the space of fourtéene daies or more. In the meane time the duke of Chatelerault, the earles of Huntleie, and Cassils, the lord Fleming, and sundrie others of that faction, séeing the time serued well for their purpose, now that the regent was slaine and dispatched out of the waie, gathered a power, to the number of three thousand men, and came downe to Edenburgh. But after that they had knowledge that the erle of Lennox was comming out of England with a power of Englishmen, by the quæns maiesties appointment; aswell for the safegard of the yong king, as also for the safe conduct of the earle of Lennox home into Scotland: the duke and earles aforesaid retired themselues from Edenburgh to Glascow, where they besieged the castell by the space of fiue or six daies, vntill the earle of Lennox approched thitherwards. For ye haue to vnderstand, that after the earle of Lennox was recouered of his sickenesse, there was apointed a power of horssemen and footmen, to go with him into Scotland, vnder the leading of sir William Drurie; as in the English storie ye may read more at large.

The duke of Chatelerault gathereth a power.

The duke retireth to Glascow.

There were diuerse valiant capteins and gentlemen that went with him in that iournie, aswell such as had charge, as those that went with him of their owne good wils, to sée the order of things, and to helpe to aduance their princes seruice. With charge there were these; sir George Carie capteine of an hundred lances, Henrie Austell capteine of fiftie lances, William Gurleie capteine of fiftie lances, maister Henrie Carie capteine of two hundred light horssemen, capteine Case lieutenant of the generals band of light horssemen, being also two hundred: sir Robert Constable sergeant maior of the footbands, sir Thomas Maners capteine Brikwell, capteine Caruill, capteine Game, capteine Lambard, capteine Crington, John Constable, and Humfreie Berwike leaders of the footmen. Capteine Crington was also lieutenant to sir George Caries companie of lances. Other gentlemen that went of their owne good wils, there were diuers; as maister George Deuereux, sir Jerome Bowes, maister William Knolles, maister Robert Knolles, maister Michaell Carie, maister Galwdie, maister William Drurie of Suffolke cousine to the generall, maister Greuill, brother to sir Fulke Greuill, maister Conweie, brother to sir John Conweie, maister Edmund Verneie, and manie others, whose names I could not learne.

The footmen laie the first night at Coldingham. The next day the earle of Lennox himselfe with sir William Drurie and the horssemen ouertooke the footmen, and lodged that night at Dunbar. The next day they made such spéed in their march, that they came through to Edenburgh, where they found the earles of Morton, Murreie, Glencarne, the lords Ruthwen, Lindseie, Sempill, Glamis, Methuen, Ogiltrée, and Cathcart, with diuerse gentlemen of the kings side; who receiued the said earle of Lennox, and the Englishmen verie courteouslie. From Edenburgh they passed to Lithquho, as in the English historie it maie appeare: and from thence the footmen passed to Faukirke, and there lodged. But the earle of Lennox, and the Scotish lords, with sir William Drurie and the horssemen rode to Sterling, where the king laie, then being in the custodie of the earle of Mar. From thence they went to Glascow, where the duke had besieged the castell, which was valiantlie defended by the laird of Minto and his brethren, with their seruants, being not past eightéene persons in all; and yet they kept it fiue or six daies against the duke and his whole power, slaieng (as hath béene reported) aboue fortie or fiftie of his men; but in the end they were in great danger to haue béene taken, if they had not béene the more spéedilie relieued. But the duke and his adherents, vnderstanding of the comming forward of the erle of Lennox with the English trees, brake vp his siege and fled awaie, with losse and dishonor, as in the English historie we haue likewise noted.

After that the earle of Lennox and his friends were thus come vnto Glascow, finding the siege raised, he remained there by the space of fiue or six daies. During which time, there came to him of his kinred and friends, which owght him their seruice, according to the vse of the countrie, the number of foure thousand men, verie well appointed after their maner; the more part out of the countries of Lennox and Dartheleie, which mustered before the said earle, and sir William Drurie, generall of the English there. This done, the earle of Lennox, accompanied with the earles and lords before mentioned, & likewise with the Englishmen, marched to Hamilton, where they entred into the palace belonging to the duke, and lodged therein that night.

Sée more hereof in England.

The next day they besieged the castell, whereof Andrew Hamilton of Merinton was capteine, hauing vnder him fiftie souldiers to defend it; and would not therefore deliuer it, till that two péeces of great ordinance being brought from Sterling, were planted in batterie. For then perceiuing themselues in danger to be taken by force, the capteine offered to yeeld the house to the Englishmen; but not to the lords of Scotland, with condition, to haue the liues of all them within saued. Which was granted, vpon promise, that they should neuer after beare armes against their king, and to depart the realme within a certeine terme, and hereunto they were sworne. But they kept not long their oth, for the night next insuing, they did beset the lord Sempill that was lodged at that present in a house not far off, and not able to kéepe it till rescue came, yeelded it and himselfe prisoner, so that he was kept by the Hamiltons in safe custodie by the space of twelue moneths after. The castell of Hamilton being yeelded (as ye haue heard) was blowen vp with powder. Diuers other houses there in the countrie about were burnt also, as Koplocke, the abbat of Kilwinnings house, with diuerse other of the Hamiltons houses in Clidesdale.

After the castell of Hamilton was thus woone and ouerthrowen, the lords returned to the palace, and lodged there againe that night; and on the morrow, they set fire both vpon the same palace, and also vpon the towne of Hamilton: and therewith the Englishmen taking leaue of the lords in Scotland, departed homewards; as in the English historie ye may reade more at large. The erle of Morton went with them; but the earle of Lennox and the other earles and lords with their companies tooke their way towards Glascow, and from thence euerie of the the noble men departed home to their houſes. Shortlie after, there was a conuention of the lords at Striueling, where the earle of Lennox was made lord lieutenant of Scotland: and afterwards in Auguſt following, there was an other conuention at Edenburgh, where, by the conſent of the three eſtates of the realme, the ſaid earle was made regent of Scotland.

A conuention of the lords.

The earle of Lennox made regent.

And about the ſame time, the earle of Huntleie toke vpon him to be lieutenant of Scotland for the quéene of Scots that remained ſtill in England, and therevpon in hir name ſummoned a parlement to be holden at Lithquho the one and twentith of September then next following. Vnto the which parlement, aſwell the earle of Lennox then regent, as all the reſidue of the lords of both parties were ſummoned. Whereof the regent being aduertiſed, cauſed a parlement to be ſummoned in the kings name to be kept at Lithquho, at the ſelfe ſame day which was appointed by the earle Huntleie. At which day there appeared the lords of the kings partie, & alſo ſundrie great lards, knights, and gentlemen, to the number of eight thouſand, verie well furniſhed, loking for the earle of Huntleis comming, according to his appointed order; but he came no néeter than Brechine.

Whereupon it was decréed by the regent and nobilitie there, to purſue him: and to that end, James Dowglas earle of Morton was ſent before with a thouſand horſſemen to haue taken him vpon the ſudden in the towne of Brechine, before he ſhould haue ante warning of their comming, the regent following after with an armie. But Huntlie hauing warning of their approch, eſcaped their hands, although verie narrowlie; in ſomuch that ſome of his footmen were ſo put to their ſhifts, that they were driuen for their refuge (being ſo beſet on the ſudden) to take the caſtell of Brechine: the earle of Huntleie promiſing before he went from them, to ſuccour them within eight daies; but they being ſtreictlie beſieged, and the earle not keeping promiſe with them, after thoſe eight daies were expired, they yéelded themſelues and the caſtell vnto the regents mercie.

The earle of Huntleie eſcapeth.

They were in all about three hundred, of which number one and thirtie of the chiefeſt were executed. Some of them had borne arms againſt the king before that time, and had béene pardoned, and therefore were now thought by the regent and his friends the more worthie to die. After this, the regent returned to Striueling, and from thence paſſed to the caſtell of Downe, and beſieged it; being kept by the ſeruants of the lord of ſaint Colmes Inch, who yéelded it to the regent after three daies ſiege. During the time of the regents being there, he ſent one of his ſeruants called John Wone, with letters into England, directed to the quéene of Englands councell: who (for his ſecret practiſing and conference had with ſuch as were enimies to the king and regent before his departure out of Scotland, and for receiuing of their letters to be conueied alſo, and herewith diſcouering ſundrie ſecrets to them, the which were committed vnto his credit and truſt) was apprehended, and the ſame letters which he had ſecretlie receiued being found vpon him, and the matters aforeſaid proued againſt him, he was by law executed.

Execution.

The caſtell of Downe yéelded.

About the ſame time the earle of Morton, the abbat of Dunfermeling, and James Macgill, clearke of the regiſter, were ſent into England commiſſioners vpon the kings partie; the biſhop of Roſſe, the abbat of Kilwinning, & the lord Leuingſton, appointed for the quéene then being in England. In Januarie following, the regent then being at Edenburgh, Claud Hamilton, one of the duke of Chateraults ſonnes, entred the houſe of Paſleie, then being kept by the ſeruants of the lord Sempill: and ſeizing vpon all things which they found as ſtood with his pleaſure, he fortified the houſe with men, munition, and vittels, ſuch as he could get either in the towne of Paſleie, or nere thereabouts. The regent aduertiſed thereof, repaired thither with a power in all ſpédie wiſe, and laid ſiege to the houſe. They within ſued for a truce, which was granted to them for the ſpace of ſix daies, the better to aduiſe of their owne eſtate: which terme being expired, proclamation was made by the regent, that if they would yæld the houſe, ſo manie of them as had not borne armes before that time againſt the king and regent, ſhould haue their liues ſaued, the reſt to remaine at the regents pleaſure.

Herevpon contention roſe among them within the houſe: for whereas the more part of them hauing not ſerued in anie iournie or exploit againſt the king before that time, would néeds yéeld; the other, being the leſſe number, were not able to defend it of themſelues. Whereupon they were readie to draw their weapons one againſt another; but yet in the end they agréed to ſurrender the houſe, and yéelded themſelues, vpon ſuch condition as the regent had preſcribed: whereupon fiue of them were executed, & all the reſt were pardoned of their liues. The capteine John Hamilton, lard of Coughnall, and his two brethren excepted, who were ſent to the caſtell of Glaſcow, there to remaine in priſon, and ſhortlie after the ſaid John Hamilton was executed.

Paſleie is furrendred to the regent.

In March following, the regent returned to Glaſcow, and for that Gilbert Kennedie with the erles of Caſſils & Eglenton refuſed to ſhew themſelues obedient to the king, and would not come to the regent, who had ſent for them by letters at ſundrie times, the regent gathered his power at Glaſcow, and with the ſame marched towards Vrwin and Air, and ſo forward to the earle of Caſſils countrie, who hearing of the regents comming, ſent forth his brother to offer his ſubmiſſion. Whereupon it was concluded, that the meſſenger ſhould remaine with the regent as pledge for his brother, by the ſpace of twentie daies; and then the ſaid earle to make his appearance before the regent at Striueling, to anſwere ſuch matters as ſhould be laid to his charge.

The regent goeth againſt the earle of Caſſils.

The ſame time alſo Hugh Montgomerie earle of Eglenton, and Robert Boid leuied their bands alſo to appeare and anſwer in like ſort: and as well the one as the other (according to their aſſurance giuen) appeared at the day appointed; but yet not agréeing to ſuch articles as were required of them, they were both committed to priſon, the one in the caſtell of Dunbreton, & the other in the caſtell of Downe. Afterwards there was a truce taken betwéene the regent, the Hamiltons, and their adherents for twentie daies, to wit, vntill the laſt of March. Which truce once ended, the regent determined with himſelfe to giue an attempt to the caſtell of Dunbreton, which had béene long kept by the lord Fleming againſt the king, and the earle of Murreie late regent, who had beſieged it for the ſpace of halfe a yéere or more, but could not by anie meanes compaſſe to win it.

The earles of Caſſils and Eglenton committed to ward.

A truce for twentie daies,

But now on the firſt of Aprill, the truce being then expired, the regent going forward with his purpoſe, cauſed all the paſſages round about the countrie to be ſtopped, as well by land as by water; and the ſame night ſent thitherward captein Thomas Crawford, and capteine Hume, with an hundred ſouldiers, choſen out for the purpoſe: who the ſecond of Aprill, about foure of the clocke in the morning, came to the caſtell, where the ſouldiers with ladders, ropes, and other deuiſes, found meanes to clime vp the rocke, which which is of an exceeding great heigth, and so with great paine, and more danger, at length got vp to the wall of the castell, standing vpon the heigth of the rocke, to the which wall they reared vp a ladder, by the which entered first one Alexander Ramsie, ensigne-bearer to capteine Crawford, & leaping ouer the wall, was streightwaies assailed by three of the watchmen, of the which he slue one: and a souldier named Wederborne that followed him, being the second that entered, slue another of them: the third of those watchmen was also slaine, as he was about to flee from them.

The castell of Dunbreton taken by a policie.

Herewith capteine Crawford & capteine Hume got ouer the wall, and entering the castell with the rest of their souldiers, stroke vp the drum, & cried; A Derneleie, being their watchword; and seizing vpon the ordinance, manned the same. The lord Fleming capteine of the castell, hearing that sudden fright and tumult within the house, fled out by the posterne gate at the neither baile, and so escaping, got a fishers boat, and passed into Argile. The souldiers of the castell, perceiuing their captein fled, and the castell possessed by the enimies, yeelded themselues, and were pardoned. There were taken within the castell John Hamilton, the archbishop of saint Andrews, monsieur de Veriacke a Frenchman, sent thither by the French king, also the ladie Fleming, wife to the lord Fleming, and John Fleming lard of Boghall, Alexander the sonne of William Leyingston, and John Hall an Englishman, being partener of a new intended conspiracie, as was after proued against him, for the which he was arreigned, condemned, and executed at London; as in the English historie appeareth.

The third of Aprill, being the morrow after that Dunbreton was thus strangelie wone, the regent came thither, and entered the same, where he calling the capteins and souldiers togither, caused them with him to kneele downe vpon their knees, and to giue God humble thanks for their good successe in that enterprise, brought to passe rather by the prouidence of God than otherwise, sith the castell seemed to all those that knew it, impossible in maner to be wone, by reason of the great heigth of the rocke, and the strange situation, being inuironed almost round about with the water of Clide on the one side, and the water of Leuin on the other. The report of the winning of this castell was ioifull to the townes and countries about, which before had beene a continuall scourge to them, by reason that the souldiers that kept it, would issue out at sundrie times, robbing, spoiling, and carieng awaie the commodities of the inhabitants there abouts, as well by land as by water.

The strong situation of the castell of Dunbreton.

The regent dealt verie honorablie with the ladie Fleming, suffering hir to depart away with all such plate and iewels, as apperteined either to hir or hir husband. He granted also a safe conduct to monsieur de Veriacke, to passe homewards through the countrie, but the archbishop of saint Andrews was sent prisoner to Striueling. The spoile of the goods found in the castell was giuen to the souldiers that ventured so dangerouslie to atchiue so high an enterprise, bringing it to the wished effect by policie with so little bloudshed as deserueth perpetuall remembrance. The day next insuing, being the fourth of Aprill, the regent appointed John Cuningham lard of Drumthassell, a man of good seruice, and seruant to the regent, to be capteine of that castell, and leauing him therein, departed to Striueling, where he caused the archbishop of saint Andrews to be examined vpon certeine articles, as well touching the murther of the late king Henrie, as also for the death of the earle of Murreie the late regent.

The ladie Fleming honorablie intreated.

At what time there came in a priest without compulsion of anie (as hath beene said) and before the regent declared that one John Hamilton, being in extreme sickenesse, vnder confession told him, that the bishop did send him with three others to the murther of the king. And as touching the murther of the erle of Murreie, the bishops flat answer was, he might haue letted it if he would. Herewith the people that heard him, cried, Awaie with him, hang him. And so for these and other offenses, for the which he had beene forfalted afore that time, he was now executed on a gibet, set vp in the market place of Striueling towne. After this, the regent summoned a parlement, to begin at Edenburgh the fourteenth of Maie next insuing, and passed from Striueling to Lithquo.

The archbishop of saint Andrews executed.

A parlement summoned.

Here the earle of Morton (with the rest of the commissioners for the kings part, being returned out of England, with other of the nobilitie) met the regent, and then they passed toward Edenburgh, where they thought to haue beene received, and so to haue kept the parlement there. But they were not suffered to enter that towne, nor yet the castell, the same being defended against them by the lard of Grange, who after the death of the earle of Murreie, was reuolted from the kings part to the Hamiltons side, and had fortified both the towne and castell: so that the regent and nobilitie being kept out there, held their parlement in the Cannogate street, within the suburbs of the towne, where sundrie of the quenes part were forfalted. This being done, and sundrie skirmishes had with them that issued forth of the towne against them without, the regent returned to Striueling, there to remaine for a season.

The castell of Edenburgh kept by the lard of Grange against the regent.

In the meane time the earle of Morton, hauing certeine stuffe come forth of England by sea, and brought to land at Leith, sent the lard of Carmichell with his houshould seruants, & two hundred shot, to fetch the same from thence vnto Dalketh, being fiue miles distant from Leith. At their returne with the stuffe, they were set vpon by the earle of Huntleie, and the lord Hume, who issued out of Edenburgh with their power: so that betwixt them was a verie hot skirmish. But in the end the earle of Huntleie, & the lord Hume were constreined to flie, and were pursued by Carmichell and his companie euen vnto the gates of Edenburgh, some of their men being slaine, and others taken prisoners. For reuenge of which ouerthrow, shortlie after the earle of Huntleie, and Clan Hamilton, with their forces marched from Edenburgh, to Dalketh, purposing to haue spoiled the towne.

The lard of Carmichell.

The earle of Huntleie and lord Hume put to flight.

But the earle of Morton, hauing knowledge of their intention and comming, sallied forth of Dalketh with the power which he had there with him, although not comparable in number to his aduersaries; & meeting them in the field, there was a sharpe skirmish betwixt them, and manie hurt on both parties: but in the end the earle of Morton was put to the worse, fourtie or more of his men taken prisoners. And the cause was, for that his footmen were too forward, wanting helpe of their horsemen that should haue succoured them. About the fiue & twentith day of Maie following, capteine Cullen issued forth of Edenburgh with two hundred shot, meaning to intercept certeine harquebusers, which were appointed to come out of Fife ouer the riuer of the Forth, vnto the earle of Morton, who kept still at Dalketh.

The earle of Morton put to the worse.

Wherevpon the said earle, hauing knowledge of Cullens enterprise, aduertised the regent therof, who being then at Striueling, the next day came downe to Dunfermling in Fife. But before his comming thither, thither, Cullen had met with a bote vpon the water, wherein were aboord fiue and twentie shot, whome he toke prisoners, and led them awaie with him to Edenburgh. The next day the earle of Morton came to Leith, where he met with sir William Drurie, and there they lodged that night. The next morning sir William Drurie passing forth of Leith towards Edenburgh, accompanied with sundrie capteins, and other gentlemen for his conuoie thither, they within Edenburgh perceiuing them comming, imagined that they were come forth to offer a skirmish, wherevpon they issued out of the towne and castell to incounter them.

So that being readie on either side to begin the skirmish, sir William Drurie, being come to talke with the parties for some accord to be had, toke in hand with great diligence to appease them: and at length procured them to agree vpon a truce to indure till eight of the clocke at night. But yet when both parts staied in the fields for the space of an houre, because they could not agree whether companie should first retire from the field, they fell at length in skirmish (notwithstanding the truce) and fought verie sharplie for the time, till in the end they of the towne and castell had the ouerthrow: the abbat of Kilwinning being slaine, with diuerse other; and there were taken aboue an hundred prisoners: amongest the which the lord Hume, and capteine Cullen were accounted principall. Those that escaped were chased, & constreined for their safetie to flee into the towne of Edenburgh, & capteine Cullen was afterwards beheaded.

The regent immediatlie after this skirmish came with all speed to Leith, as well to fortifie the towne, as to make some further attempt against his aduersaries within the towne and castell of Edenburgh. Herevpon was Leith [whose capteine was Patrike Lindsele] intrenched round about, being esteemed a place of great importance, standing both in the face of the enimies, and so readie to annoie them, and also serving well to preuent them of such succour as they looked for dailie out of France. In this meane time, the lard of Grange, then capteine of the castell, and prouost of the towne of Edenburgh, caused proclamation to be made, that all those inhabitants which were not willing to take part with him in his doings, should depart out of the towne. Wherevpon, manie of them departed thence, togither with their wiues and children, and toke with them also such goods as they could secretlie conueie: and comming to Leith, offered their seruice vnto the regent, who thankfullie accepted their offer: and so they remained at Leith, serving against the contrarie faction vpon their owne expenses.

A proclamation.

After this, the lard of Grange, vnderstanding that report had bene made by some of the kings part, that he was a traitor to the king, and an enimie to his countrie, offered the combat to anie that would iustifie the same. Which being aduertised to them within Leith, diuerse gentlemen were desirous to vndertake the challenge: but the regent granted it to the lard of Garlisch, being a Steward, & his kinsman, who had earnestlie requested it. Wherevpon, after diuerse messages by heralds sent to and fro betwixt them, the time and place was appointed; but the matter went not forward, excuse being made on the behalfe of the lard Grange, that by reason of the charge which was committed to him, it was not thought conuenient that he should hazard the whole cause vpon his owne person.

The challenge of the lard of Grange.

The lard of Garlisch.

Shortlie after, there came out of France one John Chesholme, who was sent with monie to the lard of Grange for the paiment of his souldiors: he brought with him also a certeine quantitie of powder, and three hundred caleuers. Vpon his entering into the water of Fourth, and comming vp the same, he learned how the regent was in Leith: wherevpon he landed at Brent Iland, and afterwards for feare hid himselfe betwixt two cliffs of a rocke, not farre from the queenes ferrie: but at length he was found out by the abbat of saint Colmes Inch, and deliuered to the regent at Leith, in which towne the said regent late aboue two moneths, vsing sundrie meanes, as well by practise and policie, as by force to haue taken the towne of Edenburgh. In the meane time sundrie skirmishes chanced betwixt them, and diuerse prisoners were taken on either part.

John Chesholme.

At length, the regent caused a parlement to be summoned, appointing the same to be holden at Striueling the two & twentith of August next insuing. And when that day approched, he left the lord Lindsele at Leith in charge, as his lieutenant to gouerne the towne, and all the men of warre appointed to remaine in gard thereof; and repaired himselfe to Striueling, where at the prefixed date did assemble the earles of Morton, Mar, Crawford, Sutherland, Montrosse, Eglenton, Glencarne, the lords Ruthwen, Glamis, Methwen, Sempill, Ogiltree, and Cathcart, with manie lards and gentlemen. The first day of this parlement the king was conueied thither, the crowne, scepter, and sword being borne before him.

A parlement summoned.

When he had taken his place, he vttered a certeine speech as had beene taught him, touching the assembling of that parlement, which matter the regent more at large declared vnto the whole house: and this done, they proceeded further to other affaires, concerning the state of the common-wealth. Moreouer in this parlement, the duke of Chatelerault with his two sonnes, the abbat of Arbroth, and Claud Hamilton, the earle of Huntlie, the lard of Grange and sundrie others were forfalted. This parlement continued by the space of seuen daies: at the end whereof; to wit, vpon the second of September, Claud Hamilton, the lard of Bouclugh, the lard of Drumilton, and diuerse others, to the number of three hundred horsemen, verie earlie in the morning entered the towne of Striueling, and suddenlie beset not onelie the regent, but also the rest of the nobilitie within their lodgings.

The duke of Chatelerault forfalted.

The regent hearing a great vprore raised within the towne [in which George Ruthwen was slaine] and not vnderstanding the cause, nor who were the authors thereof, after he perceiued how the house wherein he lodged was beset on ech side, he defended the same against the enimies for a good space: but at length despairing of succours, and doubting least the house had beene vnderlaid with some barrels of powder, and that it would be blowen vp if he yeelded not as some told him: and the enimie to increase that doubt, crieng still; Blow vp the house, what should we stand longer about him: at length he was contented to yeeld to the lard of Drumilton, but not before he saw that some of his stoutest capteins had yeelded themselues before his face. He yeelded, with condition to haue his life saued: but promise in that behalfe was not long kept. For those that had thus taken him, when they perceiued rescue comming downe from the castell, so that they should not be able to carrie him awaie, capteine Cauder with a pistolet shot him in to the bodie, before he could be recouered out of their hands.

The earle of Lennox taken in his lodging

The earle of Lennox wounded.

The rest of the nobilitie, to wit, the earles of Morton, Eglenton, and Glencarne, and diuerse other being taken prisoners, were presentlie rescued by those that issued out of the castell. The earle of Morton being in the hands of the lard of Bouclugh, toke the same lard prisoner, he yeelding himselfe vnto him:

and

and likewise the earle of Glencarne tooke his keeper prisoner, and so did sundrie others take their takers: but Claud Hamilton, with others their companies, hauing first gotten all the horsses that were found in the towne into their hands, when they heard that the rescus was comming, shifted for themselues, and fled awaie. The regent, being mortallie wounded, but yet deliuered from his enimies, rid vp to the castell, and calling there vnto him the whole nobilitie, when he perceiued his end to approch, he vsed these words (or the like in substance) as followeth.

The earle of Lennox his words before his death.

"My lords, it is not vnknowen vnto you all, that my comming hither to take this regiment vpon me, was not of mine owne seeking, but at the request of you all. And that which chieflie moued me hereunto, was, for the defense of the kings person, being yet (as you see) an infant; of whome by nature and dutie I was bounden to haue carefull consideration, and that in his minoritie, the good and quiet gouernement of this common-wealth might be aduanced, and iustice executed vpon those that most cruellie did murther the late king, my sonne the kings father, and his vncle the good earle of Murreie, late regent: whose mischeeuous and diuelish deuises if in time you do not preuent by your wisedoms and discretions, they will procure the finall ouerthrow and destruction of you all. In this action (as you see) I haue spent my bloud, and haue plaied the last part of my tragedie; and now I feele death to draw neere at hand.

Wherefore I require you all, for the due regard that you haue of your duties, first to almightie God, and next to the king your most lawfull and naturall prince now in these his tender yeeres, wholie to imploie your seruice in his defense, with care to maintein the state of this common-wealth, whereby you shall not onelie accomplish your duties towards God, but shall be assured to find in your king in time to come (God lending him life) all that good which you can iustlie require. And I shall further commit to your friendlie protection, my poore seruants, who for their good seruice haue well deserued, and yet remaine vnrecompensed, desiring you all to be good to them. And lastlie, I desire you to commend me vnto the ladie Margaret my deere wife, now being in England: vnto whome I beseech God to be a comforter. And now sith my spirits begin to faile, and that my life draweth neere to an end, I take my leaue of you all, desiring you to praie to God for me. These words being ended, he called to God for mercie, and continuing in praier vnto the end, within a while after he departed this life, and was buried in the kings chappell in the castell of Striueling.

The earle of Lennox departeth this life.

¶ Thus haue I hitherto continued this historie of Scotland, not so largelie nor perfectlie as I could haue wished, but skambled forward with it in such sort as you maie see; hauing deliuered nothing vnto you to impaire the credit of the Scotish nation, otherwise than I haue found in authors, or learned by credible report (as I take it) hauing put off the partiall affection, which I beare of dutie to mine owne countrie, in this respect, that I should not seeme to wrest the words of writers, either to the aduantage of the English people, or disaduantage of the Scots, speciallie in politike gouernement, warlike exploits, ciuill demeanor, and other vertuous exercises: which as I haue found them either in anie one person particularlie, or in the multitude in generall; so haue I reported the same, not sparing the truth herein, as I haue found it recorded, either for loue or hatred, dread, fauor, or enuie: but yet in no wise presuming (as else-where I haue said) to vse mine owne censure, but rather leauing the iudgement of other mens reports vnto the readers discretion. To whome I wish such vnderstanding and knowledge in the truth, as maie satisfie himselfe, and redound to the publike commoditie of his countrie, and pleasure of the almightie; in whose hands are the hearts of kings & gouernors, guiding the states of realms and common wealths, as to his diuine wisedome seemeth most expedient. To whom be glorie, honor, and praise for euermore; Amen.

Thus farre the painefull industrie of Raphaell Hollinshed, and others.
The sequele, concerning the continuation of this Scotish historie, is a new addition before this time neuer in English published.

THE ANNALES OF

being the yeare of our Lord 1571, vntill the yeare of our redemption 1586, by Francis Boteuile, commonlie called Thin.

SOcrates (good reader) being demanded how a man might ſpeake that which ſhould be beſt and acceptable to all men, moſt wiſelie (as one in all his life wholie giuen to ſerch and ſaie the truth in euerie thing) anſwered: That we then ſpeake beſt & moſt to be allowed, when we ſpeake nothing but that which we beſt and perfectlie know. For we know nothing excellentlie well, but ſuch things as are often heard by vs from others, manie times repeated by our ſelues; and that which is commonlie receiued, imbraced, approoued, and vſed by all men. Now thoſe things are moſt vſed which concerne publike affaires, and ſuch publike affaires are moſt knowne when they end in publike action; & publike action, ſo farre foorth as it concerneth the thing doone, muſt needs be true that the ſame was ſo doone in that order, as it was openlie ſene to be doone. Wherby might be concluded, that in chronicling and treating of publike affaires, we ſhould ſpeake that which is beſt, which is moſt acceptable, & moſt true: bicauſe we report things doone in the eies of all men. But how trulie that is performed in ſome new writers, it is well knowne to all men of iudgement. For ſuch is the affection of our age, that ſome of malice, and ſome for flatterie, and euerie one to feed their owne diſpoſition, doo ſo gloſe things publiklie doone, as with a certeine witcherie of words, they like Circes transforme the things doone in publike ſhew to be of other ſhapes than they were indeed. Whereby Socrates maie now ſeeme to be confuted, in ſaieng, that they ſpeake beſt that ſpeake things receiued of all men, and that be common to the world: for ſo ſhall miſreporting and flatterie, a thing commonlie knowne and vſed of all men, be the beſt ſpeech; which in truth neither is nor can be. Now what I haue ſeene and knowne in that, as well of things at home as of things abroad, I forbeare to write; and for that cauſe alſo might moſt iuſtlie reſtraine my pen (writing vpon the report of others) both now and hereafter from treating of ſuch publike affaires, to the end my ſelfe ſhould not run into the danger of a like falſifier or miſreporter. But then on the contrarie part, when I fall to an other expoſition of the ſame ſaieng of Socrates, that he ſpeaketh beſt, that ſpeaketh that which he beſt knoweth, and that we beſt know the things which are commonlie receiued, and that we receiue thoſe for ſoundeſt which time trieth to be moſt true, and thoſe things which be moſt true are ſuch as are knowne to be publikelie doone; I ſuppoſe I ſhall ſpeake beſt and moſt acceptablie in writing publike affaires; conſidering that I am not ſworne to anie faction, nor carried with hate or loue, nor bewitched with promiſe of gaine or honour, nor inforced to turne to the right or left hand, but onelie left at libertie to make truth the daughter of time to be the common end, knowledge, and report of publike things: ſith the end of labor, of contemplation of ſtudie, & fruit of writing (as appeareth 2. Met. 4.) is the atteining of truth, and not that perpetuitie or memorie of a famous name or report, a thing alwaies ſought by me to be auoided, being onlie content in ſecrecie to relie my ſelfe vpon the recording of truth, which of all things (in my mind) is moſt pleaſant, bicauſe the ſame is alwaie a conqueror. For as ſaith Nehemias, Truth is great and dooth mightilie preuaile. Wherefore, as I ſaid, ſith thoſe things be moſt true & beſt knowne which are publikelie doone, and that they are publikelie doone that ſort to anie action in the common-welth: we then conclude that we write beſt and moſt acceptablie, when we trulie ſet downe a common truth of common occurrents doone in the common-wealth; bicauſe that ſuch things trulie reported, doo conclude with Socrates that we ſpeake and write beſt in declaring a deed trulie doone, in that order (without ambages, gloſes, or parcialities) as the ſame was moſt trulie performed touching the truth of that outward act.

Accept therfore (good reader) that which I doo ſuppoſe I haue beſt ſpoken (by this my argument grounded vpon Socrates) in this my continuance of the Annales of Scotland vnwillinglie attempted, but by inforcement of others, whoſe commanding friendſhip it had beene ſacrilege for me to haue gaineſaid. And therefore rather careleſſe to hazard the hard opinion of others, deſcanting vpon my ſudden leaping into the printers ſhop (eſpecially at the firſt in a matter of ſuch importance) than the loſſe of the long and aſſured friendſhip of thoſe which laied this heauie charge vpon my weake ſhoulders, I haue like blind baiard boldlie run into this matter, vnder the hope of thy fauourable acceptance. And though herein I ſhall not in euerie reſpect ſatisfie all mens minds and iudgements, that for fauour of perſons, times, & actions, will like Proteus at their owne pleaſure make black ſeeme white, alter euerie matter into euerie ſhape, & curiouſlie carping at my barrennes in writing, bicauſe I omit manie things in this my continuance of the Annales of Scotland, & haue reported things in other formes than ſome mens humors would haue had me to doo: I muſt deſire thee to conſider for the firſt that the Scots themſelues, beſides manie others of our owne nation are the cauſe thereof, who either for feare durſt not, or for prentended aduiſe and conſultation in the matter would not, or for the reſtreint of others might not, impart to me ſuch things as ſhould both concerne the honour of the Scotiſh nation, and the ſubſtance of their owne cauſe. For the other matter, if I ſhould bind my ſtile to the affections of ſome, I ſhould breake the rule of Socrates, and not ſpeake the beſt, ſith I ſhould then ſpeake publike and common things, publikelie knowne to all men, contrarie to that order, in which they were commonlie and publikelie ſeene to be doone of all men; and ſo by that meanes fall into the reproch of a diſdeined reporter.

Now, if thou which art the reader, thinke that I (vnacquainted with mattets of ſtate, eſpeciallie in an other countrie, better knowne to all men than to my ſelfe) am far vnable to breake the dangerous ice of ſuch matters, and ſo more vnmeet to enter into the boſome of princes (whoſe harts as Salomon ſaith are vnſearchable) ſhould for my vnaduiſedneſſe ſeeme worthie the puniſhment of Prometheus, that ſtale the fier from Iupiter, and caried it abrode into the world, bicauſe the affaires of princes are not to be made common, to be ſubmitted to the cenſure of their ſubiects, nor to be written vntill the aſhes of all thoſe whome the things concerne were vtterlie conſumed: thou muſt yet remember that men haue eſcaped puniſhment in dealing with higher matters than with things of chronicles, or of ſuch like which onelie touch the life of the bodie. And therefore in puniſhing thereof vpon Prometheus, Iupiter went beyond himſelfe. For if the greater, that is for matters touching the ſoule, went not onelie free from puniſhment, but receiued eternall reward, as after ſhall appeare, how much more ſhould Prometheus haue beene ſpared, that but onelie medled with the bodie? Now it is manifeſt that in diuinitie and matters of the ſoule (a thing that ſo far exceedeth the bodie as the ſunne dooth the moone, as angels doo inferior creatures, and as light dooth darkeneſſe) there be manie which haue lept into heauen, and by contemplation placed their pen amongſt the ſonnes of God in writing, and laieng abrode to the world (as much as in them laie) the vnſearchable works of the Almightie, whereof we cannot comprehend the leaſt cauſe, order or perfection, and haue therefore not onelie not receiued puniſhment, but eternall reward both in bodie and ſoule; as Enoch was tranſlated to paradiſe; Elias taken vp in a fierie chariot; Paule rapt vp into the third heauen, with manie others. For which cauſe I ſaie, if they which lepped into matters farre beyond the reach of men, to expreſſe in the meaneſt degree of perfection, were not puniſhed for medling therein, and writing thereof; much leſſe ought I to be puniſhed with Prometheus in medling with the diſcourſe of matters vpon the earth, and ſuch as concerne the actions of mortall creatures, as battels, mutations of kingdoms, death of princes, and ſuch other earthlie accidents. Into which yet I would not haue ſo raſhlie deſcended, or taken ſo hard a prouince in hand, had not (as before I ſaid) the commandement of ſuch as I durſt not gainſaie, interponed it ſelfe as a ſhield to receiue and beat backe the ſharpe darts of enuious toongs. For which cauſe ſith I was bound to him by deſart, and that he had better opinion of me than there was cauſe whie; I feared not (though I deemed it the part of him which doubted the iudgement and reproch of the wiſer ſort, not to haue hazarded his credit) to enter into this dangerous ſea, being not ſo much furniſhed with hope to performe it well, as deſirous to diſcharge the requeſt of him, and to ſhew the hope I conceiued at the well acceptance thereof by thee. In which diſcourſe I had rather good reader thou ſhouldeſt complaine of want of ſufficiencie in me to performe ſo hard a thing: than that he ſhould miſlike of my goodwill in anſwering his deſire. And ſhould I feare to enter heereinto, being a thing meet onelie for great councellors and men priuie of matters of eſtate; as though there were no place for Greeke poets but onelie to Homer and Sophocles; and for Latine poets, but to Virgill, Ouid, and Horace? Did the ſingularitie and ampleneſſe of Platos knowledge in philoſophie feare Ariſtotle to write in the like argument? Or hath Ariſtotle ſtaied the pen of others? Shall no man be painters but Appelles or Zeuxis, or caruers or grauers but Phidias and Lyſias? Shall no man be orators but Cicero, Quintilian, aud Demoſthenes? Shall none write hiſtories but Cæſar, Liuie, Sabellicus, Paulus Iouius, Comineus, Guicciardine, or ſuch like? Or ſhall none deliuer their trauell to the world bicauſe they cannot write in Engliſh as did ſir Thomas Moore, ſir Iohn Cheeke, Roger Askam, Gefferie Fenton, or Iohn Lilie? Yes trulie, for when they haue doone their beſt, and written what they can, a man may yet imagine a far more excellent thing, euen of and in that wherein they haue beſt trauelled, written, painted, or graued, and that euen by the ſelfe ſame thing which they haue doone. And more good reader thou canſt not doo either vpon the baſenes of my ſtile, the diſorder of the matter, or the barrenneſſe of ſupplieng of things requiſit for the furniſhing and maieſtie of an hiſtorie, than to ſuppoſe and ſaie that a better forme and method of writing, a more ample diſcourſe for the matter, and a ſweeter ſtile for the manner might haue beene had for the hiſtorie of Scotland, than that which I haue ſet downe. Wherefore if the beſt writers be ſubiect to theſe faults, that when they haue ſpent all their wit, eloquence, and art, there is yet ſomewhat to be deſired in them, as well as in me the meaneſt writer, I am content to beare all ſpeeches, and deſire thee to thinke what I would doo, and not what I ſhould doo; to excuſe me by others, and not to condemne me with others; to accept this in that ſort as I haue meant it, and rather with mildneſſe to pardon my imperfections, than with malice to barke at my well meaning. Beſides which, if thou ſhalt deeme this worke and continuation of mine for Scotland, ought to haue been conſecrated to the fauourable acceptance, and honourable protection of him to whom the firſt volume was dedicated; I anſwer (beſides that I am to him an eſtranger, and not to beg vndeſerued fauour of anie perſon, and that the firſt patrone of this Scotiſh hiſtorie is now in the low countries beyond the ſeas) this is a thing by me ſo ſlenderlie doone, that it meriteth not his honourable iudgement, or the learned view or patronage of anie other of the nobilitie. For if it had, I would then haue beſtowed the ſame vpon thoſe to whom I haue alreadie conſecrated my ſelfe, whatſoeuer I am, hauing long before this couenanted with my bodie, onelie to tie it vnto their good commandement. For hauing but one heart, I cannot dilate it to ſerue and offer it ſelfe to manie perſons, conſidering that where is but one heart, there muſt needs be but one waie: and he that will beſtowe one heart vpon manie perſons, muſt diuide the ſame into manie portions, and ſo diſmember it, that in the end it will be no heart at all; or els he muſt go to the ſhambles to prouide manie ſheepes hearts, to beſtow vpon thoſe manie to whom he will bind his manie ſeruices: for which cauſes I may neither chooſe a new patrone, nor dedicate this to the old, but onelie to thee the fauourable reader. Now before I knit vp this exordium (which may ſeeme to thee in reſpect of the following hiſtorie, to be like the towne, the gates and entrance whereinto being verie great, occaſioned Diogenes to will the inhabitants to ſhut thoſe great gates, leaſt that little towne did run out thereat) I am to admoniſh thee good reader, that in all my former additions to the hiſtorie of Scotland, I haue neither word for word, nor ſentence for ſentence, ſet downe the writings of Leſleus or Buchanan, but haue choſen out the matter as I thought beſt and apt to my deſire. After which ſort I haue likewiſe in this my continuation of the annales of that countrie, not ſet downe or deliuered things to the world in that ſort and ſtile as I haue receiued intelligence thereof, but onelie culled foorth ſuch matter as both the time wherein we liue, the matter whereof I intreat, and the method required therefore, may well beare and chalenge. Thus hauing laid before thee, that he writeth beſt that trulie writeth publike affaires, that I was commanded by my deere freends to enter into this ſand: that I cannot diſcourſe of this hiſtorie as I willinglie would: that I ought not to forbeare to write bicauſe I cannot in ſtile and matter equall the beſt: that they are to be pardoned that attempt high things: that I haue purpoſelie in generall dedicated this labour to the common reader, and not in particular to anie honourable perſon: and hoping that thou wilt pardon all imperfections, I ſparinglie enter into the continuation of the annales of Scotland (being ſuch as thou maiſt be content to read, and I am contented to write) in this ſort as heere followeth, making my firſt entrance thereinto with the death of the earle of Lennox, with whome Holinſhed finiſhed his chronicle, and ſo to the matter, after this long and tedious deteining of thee from the ſame.

THE CONTINVANCE of the annales of Scotland, from the death of the regent Matthew earle of Leneaux.

1572
Lesleus lib.10. pag.387. Buchan.lib.20.

THe earle of Leneaux slaine and buried at Stearlinge (as the state of that sante troblsome time wold so permit) the noblemen which were there present of that faction, taking part with the king, assembled themselues for the creating of a new regent, to which function they named three, and those first by oth compelled to yeeld to the voices of the nobilitie. The three appointed by them were Gilspec Cambell earle of Argile, James Dowglasse earle of Mourton, and John Areskine earle of Mar. But in the end, vpon consultation which of these for most causes (both beneficiall and honorable to the realme and king) were meetest to weeld so troublesome and dangerous an office; in the end it was laid vpon the shoulders of the last of the three, to whome (they wholie inclining) gaue full authoritie to execute the office of a regent. At the first entrance into which place, this Areskine, hauing nothing more deere or desired to and of him, than the besieging and recouerie of the castell and town of Edenbrough (out of the hands of the queens faction) to the vse of his maister and pupill (wherunto the last calends of October he was appointed, with a sufficient armie by the last deceased regent his predecessor) he was now hindered therof by sudden (and vnlooked for) turmoiles of the estates of the realme. Where vpon for that instant, the same was proroged to the ides of the said moneth of October. Which delate was after occasion of great impediment for the recouerie thereof, bicause it ministred time, power, substance, and succor to the citizens and capteins, to mure and strengthen the castell and towne, when the sharpe winter, the long nights, the hard carriage for the wars, preparation, and the want of sufficient furniture therefore (at the same time with the said turmoiles) occasioned departure from thense, without dispatch of that for which he came.

Colen.

The earle of Mar made regent of Scotland.

Certeine moneths after that the regent was gone from thense, there were some few and small excursions and skirmishes vsed amongst them, the victorie inclining to neither part. For the frée sight a watch out of the castell of Edenborough (towards euerie part of the countrie) so wrought, that the queenes faction should neither come to handstrokes, nor yet (being vnprouided) should be intrapped with the deceits of their enimies: bicause by a priuie token (giuen out of the highest towre of the castell) they were easilie warned to recoile and draw homeward in conuenient time. All which notwithstanding, they once felt the smart of the enimie, when all the horsse and lotmen were come out of the towne to intercept a part of the kings armie. For the kings faction (hauing first laid an ambush in the vallie) did with the rest come before the castell, in hope to traine the towne garrison vpon them out of the wals of their defense, which their expectation was not deceiued. For the said Edenburgers made hast out of the towne, to pursue the said part of the kings armie, which feined a spædie flight, to draw the other part further from defense of the castell. By means wherof, they of the towne did so egerlie pursue them so fleing, that in the end they went so far after their enimies, that they drew neere the enlignes of the other ambush, now shewing themselues out of the vallie to rescue their fellowes put to this feined flight. Which thing being well perceiued by the watch of the castell of Edenborough, forthwith it gaue the appointed signe, whereby those on the queenes part (before that they came neere to the place in which they were laid for) began fearfullie to recoile for their better safetie; whose flight was the more troublesome to them, bicause they knew they were in danger, and could not suspect from whense or how their hurt should come, although they were before warned therof by the said watch of the towre. In which recoile of the queenes part, the few horssemen which had before feined the flight (to draw on the other) returned, and made such hak on the backe of the lotmen, that the lotmen were inforced (with all the spéd that might be) to flie vnto the citie, the next wate that euerie man could find for his best defense: at what time yet manie of them were wounded, and manie taken prisoners, as well capteins and gentlemen of armes, as others.

Skirmishes about Edenborough.

An ambush laid by the kings faction.

The queenes part warned by the watch of Edenborough castell.

They which late in ambush pursue those that came forth to set vpō the kings part.

Whilest these things were thus slowlie performed, in that the towne of Edenbrough was with no more heat sought to be recouered, a miserable misfortune happened in an other part of Scotland: for a great slaughter was in the north end of the realme occasioned by this means. There were in that countrie two families of great power and authoritie, both valiant and wise, both harboring deadlie fod of long roted betweene them. These two were of the siernames of Gordon, and of Forboise, whereof the first liued with great concord and amitie amongst themselues,

A conflict betweene the Gordons and the Forboises ſelues, and by the kings ſufferance had manie yeares gouerned the people adioining vnto them, whereby they purchaſed both ſtrength amongſt themſelues, and the helpe of other men towards them: when contrarie, the Fozboiſes were at wars one with another, dailie impaired their owne ſtrength by their owne ſlaughters, and in the end wrought their owne confuſion, for euerie diuided kingdome cannot long continue. But yet though this ſecret rancor did ſtill remaine amongſt theſe families, they did not in manie yeares before attempt ante open warres the one againſt the other; rather liuing in ſecret emulation, than open enuie, becauſe they had (in waie of ſome ſhew of reconciliation) by marriage intermingled both their families togither. Among theſe Fozboiſes there was one called Arthur (a man of ſingular wit, and of no leſſe readie hand to performe his deuiſe) who had alwaies followed the kings part to his vttermoſt, from the firſt time of theſe diſcords. This man therefore ſuppoſing this to be the time (now or neuer) wherin he muſt honor himſelfe and his name, increaſe the ſubſtance of that part which followed him, & ſuppreſſe the rage of the Gordons, firſt laboured to bring his familie to vnitie and mutuall loue, for all vertue gathered into it ſelfe is greateſt ſtrength. The which if he might compaſſe (as by anie poſſible meanes he would leaue no ſtone vnturned that might further it) he was then in ſo good ſafetie as he deſired. For then was there not anie faction or familie in thoſe parts whatſoeuer, whoſe wealth or ſtrength he doubted, and whoſe ſtate or authoritie he did feare.

The Fozboiſes diſagree among themſelues.

Arthur Fozboiſe.

For furtherance of which vnion, when daie and place was appointed to aſſemble the Fozboiſes togither, Adam Gordon, the brother of the earle of Huntleie (deuiſing by all policie he might to hinder the ſame, and hauing priuie intelligence thereof by his kin, fauourers, and followers) came with a great power of armed men vnto the ſame place (at the time appointed for the aſſemblie of the Fozboiſes) to breake off their vnion. And although there were two troopes of the Fozboiſes, which preſentlie appeered in their ſight, yet before they could ioine their ſtrengths, Adam Gordon ſpædilie ſet vpon the one armie (not readie to be ſuccoured by the other) and in the middle thereof did kill this Arthur Fozboiſe; who being the hope of all that race and now ſlaine, his death did ſo amaze the other, that forthwith the reſt were ſone ouerthrowne, ſcattered, and fled each one as he might beſt ſhift for himſelfe. In which vnhappie conflict ſome perſons of name were preſentlie killed, and manie others taken and reſerued for ranſome. Wherevpon the reſidue (fearing more crueltie ſhould be vſed vpon the priſoners, loath to haue anie more of their race to be cut awaie, and giuing place to the time preſent) withdrew themſelues from the fight, and neuer attempted anie thing afterward in the reuenge of their ouerthrow. Which feare and wiſe ſuppreſſion of reuenge grew not without iuſt cauſe, ſuppoſing that their aduerſaries (if they were further vrged) would ſhew no more mercie to ſuch as they had priſoners, than they did to the houſe of Alexander Fozboiſe before time, which they burnt with his great bellied wife and the other of his children.

Adam Gordon diſappointeth the vnion of the Fozboiſes.

Arthur Fozboiſe ſlaine.

The Fozboiſes put to flight.

The houſe, great bellied wife, and children of Alexander Fozboiſe burnt.

The eldeſt brother of Arthur (who was the chiefe of that familie) hauing his houſe ſo ſpoiled, and himſelfe hardlie eſcaping from his enimies hands, haſtned to the court, from whenſe (though the matter was in great extremitie) he was by the king to be releeued. For which cauſe there were appointed two hundred footmen to ſuch of the nobilitie as fauoured and followed that faction, with letters to the adioining nobilitie to aſſociat themſelues to the part of the Fozboiſes. Theſe thus confederat and come togither to the reſt of the Fozboiſes, with certeine other families of their affinitie & neighbours, ſo aduanced the ſpirit of this Alexander, that he now thought himſelfe ſufficientlie fenſed againſt all the forces of his aduerſaries. But as their number increaſed, ſo there wanted amongſt them one perſon ſufficient to inioy the place of a captaine, whome the reſt might follow, ſith all the principals and heads of the families were almoſt yong men, and ſcarſe one better than others in degree of calling. Wherefore the aſſemblie being drawen into diuerſe companies (for they were inforced to follow ſeuerall leaders) John Keth with fiue hundred horſſemen departed to his houſe not far from thenſe. Alexander Fozboiſe with his retinue and two hundred footmen went to Aberden, to expell Adam Gordon from thenſe, and to repare his armie in the iournie.

The Fozboiſes follow ſeuerall leaders.

John Keth departed.

Alexander Fozboiſe goeth to Aberden.

Adam Gordon (not ſléeping his affaires, knowing the preparation of the Fozboiſes, and vnderſtanding the approch of his enimie ſo neere with ſo ſmall companie) aſſembled his people, led them out of the towne, and compelled the citizens to follow, to make the number of his armie to ſeeme the greater. Shortlie after, in a field next adioining to the towne, the two companies met, and a ſharpe conflict was committed betweene them. In which the kings footmen (appointed to the Fozboiſes) deſirous (more haſtilie than wiſelie) to fight, and aduenturing further in following of the Gordons (than their ſhot of powder would continue) they went ſo far, that in the end (being out of the reach of defenſe or helpe of their company) they were put to fearfull flight by the bowmen of the Gordons, who purſued them egerlie, and continued the battell vntill night. At what time there were not manie of the vanquiſhed ſlaine, but moſtlie taken and reſerued as priſoners, amongſt which was the ſaid Alexander Fozboiſe taken, after that he had long and valiantlie defended himſelfe againſt his enimies in the ſame conflict, to the perpetuall glorie of that houſe.

The Fozboiſes ouerthrowen beſides Aberden.

After the ſuppreſſion of the Fozboiſes in the north parts, the quéenes fauourers were highlie incouraged to attempt greater matters. Wherefore aſſembling their power out of diuerſe parts of the kingdome, they bend their minds to the ſuppreſſing of Jedworth, a towne which after the manner of the countrie is vnwalled and vnfenſed, but onelie with the ſtrength of the inhabitants: which towne (certeine yeares paſt had ſtronglie reſiſted the force of the quéenes faction. Nære vnto this towne were neighbours Thomas Car of Fernitherſt, and Walter Scot, both which beſides their owne retinue had ioined vnto them the people of the next countries, being Lideſdale, Euian, and Eſkine, alwaies troubled with robberie and giuen to ſpoile, who at that time by the libertie of war freelie without reſtreint, did wander into further countries, to preie, ſpoile and catch what they could. Beſides whom there were alſo in Teuiot (aſwell by the infection of theſe countries, as by the cuſtome of ſpoiling in the wars, for theſe things were by vſe made an other nature and priuilege, as it were from the note and paine of ſin) great families defamed with ſuch theft and rapines, and not theſe alone (ſith this poiſon had crept almoſt ouer all the land) but certeine of the next Engliſh pale (being allured with hope of preie, and ſuppoſing all things lawfull in ciuill warres) ioined togither; and (to make their number the greater, and their power the ſtronger) called from Edenborough one hundred and twentie harquebuſhers, choſen out of the cheefeſt ſouldiers, to be aſſiſtant vnto them.

Jedworth defended from aſſaute.

Walter Scot.

Buchan. li. 14.

The inhabitants of Jedworth (not ignorant of their intent, and conſidering wherevnto all this preparation paration tended) with spéedie & fearefull messengers signifie vnto John Areskine earle of Mar & regent, the present danger wherein they stood, craving some succor of light furnished souldiers to be sent to them, which forthwith was granted accordinglie. Whereupon Walter Car of Stekford, being called before the regent for that cause, had the charge of such aid granted vnto him, as a person who both for valure & experience was of sufficiencie to discharge anie such matter laied vpon him. Besides which, a conuenient number of sufficient souldiers, gathered out of the countries adioining, for that season assembled themselues in defense of the towne, & ioined their armie with them at Jedworth. At what time also to strike more feare in the one part & to aduance the courage of the other part, it was noised amongst both armies that William Ruthwine with a hundred shot and certeine horsmen (wherof he brought part with him, and part he gathered out of the marches adioining) were at the same time comming to Dxburge with the said Ruthwine. All which notwithstanding, the quænes faction trusting to their owne strength consisting in multitude (for they were in number three thousand men) did earlie in the morning draw towards the towne, to preuent the comming of such succours as both were promised, looked for, and then almost at hand. Which being by Ruthwine partlie before suspected, he hastened the people with more spéd to follow them at the héles, and by continuall shot wered the taile of his aduersaries with often assaults and skirmishes.

Walter Car also ioining vnto him and to his complices the townes men (readie to defend their liues, their goods, their wiues, and their children) take the direct waie towards his enimies, to the end the better to suppresse them and their vnited force. Which when the aduerse part perceiued, forthwith they retired to places of more defense, lest they shuld incounter their enimies with doubtfull battell; and least being set vpon before and behind, they might be suddenlie inclosed, before they could be able to turne themselues, either to escape, or to preuent the approching enimie. At what time such as sought after spoile, and were allured to that warre with hope of gaine, being now by that means defrauded of their preie, when they saw the towne manfullie defended, and the kings part readilie and stronglie come forth to battell, left the field, and departed euerie man to his owne house, as it was nérest to the place where they then remained. Whose sudden slight, without any occasion of danger, being vnderstood of the chiefe of the rest of such as were of the quænes faction (supposing at the first nothing lesse than that the enimie would make vpon them) they also followed after the others, raised their campe, and departed to Hawike with the rest of their followers and companie of footmen, hoping thereby to escape all danger, by reason of the sharpenesse of the winter and late fall of the snow, which would staie the following of the enimie.

But Ruthwine, iudging it best to vse the opportunitie of time, did before daie so spéedilie lead his armie to Hawike, that he was within a mile of his enimies, before they could by anie means be certified of his comming. Whose spéedie and vnlooked for approch did strike such extreame feare into the hearts of those which possessed Hawike; that there was no place left for anie consultation; but presentlie that euerie one should shift for himselfe as well as hé might. Whereupon suddenlie bringing forth their horsses and footmen, and following the course of the next riuer, they attempted to withdraw into places of more safetie for themselues, and further from their enimies. But the horsemen of Ruthwine spéedilie following at their héles, so preuented their deuise, that forsaking their footmen, they fled ouer all the countrie to the places best knowne vnto them.

Upon which the footmen being thus left to the spoile and prete of their enimies, did (for their more safegard) hide themselues in a little wood adioining to the said riuer. In which, being on euerie side beset with the force of their aduersaries (fullie determined to preie vpon them) they did in the end wholie yéeld themselues with submission to their courtesie. Wherupon (sith they were not able like prisoners, for their number was ouer great to be caried about from place to place in that sharpe winter) they were (vpon their oth to returne and become true prisoners) suffered harmeles of bodie, and lossesse of furniture to depart, some few being still reteined in that place as pledges for the others departed companie. But when the time of their returne approched, Kircawdie, deceiuing their faith with his light promises, forbad them to returne at their daie appointed, and made them incurre the note of periurie. The rest of the winter, and all the next spring was passed forth with light skirmishes on both parties of the kings and quænes factions, in which few lost their liues, and of that few more on the quéens than kings part. For the quænes fauourers, remaining in the mounteins next adioining to the citie, whilest they would take occasion and aduantage to performe anie thing well, would (scarse entring into the danger of the conflict) for the most part retire and flie into the citie for more defense.

In the meane time, while these things were thus ordered, there came manie ambassadors out of England, to pacifie these discords growne to these great extremities, betwéene the king and the imprisoned quænes factions. But the same ambassage so well meant by the quéene of England, and reiected by the seditious of Scotland, sorted not to that end which was meant, nor as the state of Scotland required. Wherefore these ambassadors returned home without anie such dispatch as might answer their trauels, their mistresses care and loue, and the vnitie of that quarelsome people: by reason that the Frenchmen fauouring the cause of the banished quæne, did not onelie hinder the peace and quiet of the Scots, for the benefit of the realme; but also sought warres for the destruction of they naturall subiects, and to bring in their owne gouernment; who for the furtherance thereof, did with great promises interteine the apt minds of the quarrelling faction, to kindle and mainteine the fire of continuall warre, vntill such time as by force they had gotten the vpper hand, and brought the kings fauourers to destruction. For the better support whereof, the French king sent some portion of monie, which being of it selfe not great, or such as their necessitie required, séemed rather sufficient to nourish an hope of abilitie to mainteine the warres, than fullie to dispatch or defraie the charges or the affaires therein; and that the rather, bicause some part of that monie was euer deuoured by such as had the cariage thereof.

Amongst these things there still continued, for a few moneths, certeine light skirmishes to little purpose betwéene the aduerse parties. But the greater companie, who could not satisfie their eagles minds with litle flies, abstained not from robbing and burning the countrie. For Adam Gordon, entring into Angus, besieged the house of William Dowglasse of Glemberuie: but after that long besiege, perceiuing that the man whome he sought for, was not to be found there, he cruellie destroied all whatsoeuer there was left, consuming it with fire and sword. Which tyrannie did strike such fearfull impression into the harts of those of Dundée, that they despairing of their owne abilitie to resist them, called their neigh-

Blackenesse betraied.

At which time Blackenesse being betraied to the Hamiltons by the keeper of that castell, did greatlie hinder the traffike and passage betweene Leith and Sterling. For which cause the regent as a person that hædfullie loked into the dangers of that time, and with wise forecast sought to preuent following euils, brake downe all the mils about Edenburgh, furnished all the noble mens houses and places of defense with garrisons nére vnto the towne, and closed vp all passage to and from the citie. For now there was fresh skirmishing, and manie on both parts, as well of the king as of the deposed quæne were taken prisoners, put to their ransome, compelled to abiure their faction, kept in continuall prison, or else presentlie slaine.

Edenburgh mils broken.

Prisoners taken both on the king and quæns part.

These things thus depending, and the king and the deposed quénes faction contending still to support their parts, the matter did dailie more and more grow to great slaughters: which being well perceiued by forreine nations (pitieng the present calamities, and seeking to prouide to staie the following dissention of that countrie which was like to be at hand vpon these ciuill and vnnaturall warres, if better order were not taken therefore), the quæne of England as the kings next and louing neighbour, and the French king also the confederat of Scotland, sent their ambassadors into the realme, to sée what qualification might be had in these troublesome and dangerous times of the kings minoritie; hoping either to set a finall end to these inconueniences, or at least to mitigate and staie that furie, that it should not at that present, or during the kings minoritie passe anie further. For the accomplishment whereof, sir William Drurie knight, and Thomas Randolph esquier, were sent from the quæne of England: and monsieur de Croque, who had also béene ambassador out of France into Scotland before that time, was now againe sent thither from the French king.

The quæne of England & the French king send ambassadors into Scotland.

These much about one time arriuing in Scotland, and ioining togither concerning the execution of their ambassage, dealt so effectuallie therein, that in the end they concluded an abstinence of warre to be had betweene the parties of the king and quænes faction, from that time which was about the first of August, to continue vntill the first of December following: and so brought both the parties in conclusion to relie and abide the full determination of all quarels to be set downe by the quæne of England, and the French king. Which being done the ambassadors returned home, monsieur Croque into France, and sir William Drurie and maister Randolph into England.

An abstinence of warre for a time.

Sir William Drurie and maister Randolph go into Scotland.

In October following died the earle of Marre, regent of Scotland, of a lingering sicknesse (as some affirme) but Lesleus saith lib. 10. pag. vltima, that morte repentina concidit) being buried in Allowaie a place of his owne, situat foure miles from Sterling, to whom in the erledome succéeded John erle of Marre, who after fled into England, as in this following discourse shall appeare. Which John Areskine earle of Marre the regent did marrie Annable Murrie daughter to the lard of Tullebarton, by whom he had issue this John, which succéeded him in the earledome of Marre (as is before said) and one daughter which was married to Archibald Douglasse now earle of Angus: but she died without issue. Of which deceased Areskine earle of Marre, Buchanan composed these verses commendatorie, expressing the nature, vertues, qualities, and valour of the said earle in this forme and maner following:

The death of the earle of Marre.

Si quis Areskinum memoret per bella ferocem,
Pace grauem nulli, tempore vtroque viro:
Si quis opes sine fastu, animum sine fraude cauentem,
Rebus in ambiguis sustinere fidem,
Si quis ob has dotes, sæuis iactata procellis,
Figit in illius patria fessa pedem:
Vera quidem memoret, sed non & propria: laudes
Qui pariter petet has vnus & alter erit:
Illud & proprium est, longæ quòd in ordine vitæ
Nil odium aut liuor, quod reprehendit, habet.

Upon the death of which earle Marre the regent, there happened long consultation for the election of a new regent to succéd in his place, that might in all respects defend the kings person and the realme, as he had done before. Wherefore the noble men, assembling for that cause, did in the moneth of December, one moneth and more after the death of that last regent, elect by one consent the earle Morton to that office, a man no lesse wise than prouident, and such a person, as both for the nobilitie of his birth, good seruice to the realme and to the king, did well merit the same. After whose election, the two princes, the English quæne, and the French king, minding to make a full conclusion of peace and amitie, and to settle the kingdome of Scotland in due obedience and vnitie, did in the meane time that the abstinence of warre before named continued, send their ambassadors to the regent and states of Scotland. Which ambassadors were maister Henrie Killigrew esquire for England, and monsieur de Veracke for France. But as monsieur de Veracke was dislodged from the coasts of France, and vpon the sea in his iournete to Scotland; he was apprehended and taken, before he could atteine to the shore of Scotland: whereby he neuer came on land amongest the Scots to performe his ambassage. Which being knowne to the Scots, and they finding that their most aid & surest friendship would come forth of England from that prince, whome religion, bloud, affinitie, and neighborhood had moued to like and follow, did in the end resolue themselues, that both the affection, aswell of the yong king, and of the imprisoned quæne, should referre themselues to the quæne of England, to make a finall conclusion of all controuersies and troubles which were then amongst them.

Eorle Morton made regent.

Maister Henrie Killigrew sent into Scotland.

Wherevpon the said Henrie Killigrew made a quiet end and pacification of all matters & debates betweene all the lords of Scotland after this maner.

In Februarie following the new creation of this regent Morton, there assembled at Perth, or saint Johns towne (by especiall edict therefore) the greatest part of the nobilitie of Scotland, as the regent, the earles of Huntlie, Argile, Atholl, and others: who pitieng the miserie of their countrie, condescended that the quæne of England should by hir ambassador, set a quiet end and order amongest them. Which the said Henrie Killigrew did in all points accordinglie, extending the same vnto all the nobilitie of Scotland, except such as were in the castell of Edenborough: which were the lord Hume, the lord of Grange, secretarie Lidington, the lord Kaskarrege, and others: who rather desirous of warre than peace, as persons meetelie well inured therewithall, would not consent to anie peace, other than such as might stand with their owne liking, and support of the imprisoned quænes faction, which they earnestlie followed, as after shall more appeare.

In assemblie at saint Johns towne.

But before this finall agreement, as I haue béene crediblie informed, there was a parlement called at Edenborough to begin the fifteenth of Januarie, in which were assembled the earle Morton regent, the earles of Angus, Argile, Glencarne, Cassels, sels, Eglinton, Mountrosse, and yong Marshall, for the earle Marshall his father: the lords of Ruthwen, Lindsete, Glames, Simple, Bold, Marwell, Herris, Graie, Oliphant, Sinclair, Forbois, Cathart, Ochiltree, Somerwell, and others: with the commissioners of the borows of Edenborough, Striueling, Perth, Dundie, saint Andrews, Glascow, Lithgo, and Couper. Out of which number of this assemblie were chosen for to be lords and iudges, to determine the articles propounded in that parlement, the earles of Argile, Glencarne, and Mountrosse, the lords Ruthwen, Lindsete, Bold, Simple, and Herris, with the bishops of saint Andrews & Orkenete, the abbats of Aberbroth, Dunfirmling, Canbuskineth, and Newbottle, besides the prior of saint Marie ile and Portinlake, which were also adioined vnto them: all which persons so passed, named, and appointed, determined, ratified, & passed these articles following.

The articles and acts of the parlement holden at Edenborough the 25 of Ianuarie.

1 The approbation and ratification of the regiment.

2 Annenst the true and holie kirke, and deiering of the true ministers & members thereof.

3 That nane of the aduersaries and enimies of Gods truth shall iniote the patrimonie of the kirke.

4 That sike of the disobedients as shall be receiued to mercie and pardon, protest the true religion, and sweare to resist the decrées and execution of the councell of Trent.

5 The establishing of the regiment, in case that charge yet baile during the kings minoritie.

6 Annenst recouering of the iewels, houshold stuffe, munition, and moueables, such as sometime were the quhenes the kings mother, to his highnesse vse and behoofe.

7 A declaration, that all things done in the kings name and authoritie is lawfull, and of the inualiditie of all things attempted in anie name, and vnder colour of quhat soeuer other authoritie, since his highnesse coronation.

8 Touching motion to be made for a league with the quhens maiestie of England, for the defense of forren inuasion, for the cause of religion; and that others professing the true religion, may be drawne into the same.

9 The declaration and interpretation of the act annenst masse and gleibis.

10 Annenst the interpretation of the popes and other counterfet buls or prouision to benefices with antedats.

11 Approbation with some addition to the act of priuie councell, made in the reigne of the quhene the kings mother, annenst the disposition of benefices to ministers of the kirke.

12 Annenst execution against persons excommunicat.

13 Annenst the reparation of parish kirks.

14 Annenst proceeding in cause of diuorse.

15 Annenst the reparation of the destructions, biggings, and other damneges within the towne of Edenborough during the late trouble.

16 A confirmation of the infeffement of certeine rents to the pedagog or college of Glascow. All which acts thus fullie passed in this parlement, there was the same aduise giuen to the regent, touching the receiuing to pardon of persons guiltie to the slaughter of the earle of Lennox late regent, & touching suspension and delaieng of pursute of the murther of the kings father. Whereof much being spoken, and thought good to be followed; yet there was nothing enacted that might establish the same.

During the time of which session of this parlement, manie occurrents deseruing remembrance happened after the said fiftéenth of Januarie. For Edenborough castell being somewhat distressed, the castilians were put from sallieng out of the castell gate, where capteine Craiford, and capteine Hume laie with their bands to kéepe them in. Notwithstanding all which, they within repaired vnto a posterne in the northside of the castell besides saint Cutberts church, and saint Margarets well, where they issued and fet water at their pleasure: which being espied by their enimies, capteine Michaell and his band came from Dondiske to stop their passage thereto. Who within thrée daies after such his approch, destroied their well, and inforced them to kéepe within the wals of the castell: at what time the regent aduanced his trenches made against the castell, from the bulworke or spurre of that castell to the west part: and from thense, to saint Cutberts kirke: so that with the water lieng on the southwestside, and the regents power on the other side, the castell was wholie inuironed. During which siege, the sixtéenth of the same moneth, the castilians, to feare such as were assembled in the forenamed parlement kept within the towne of Edenborough, bestowed fourescore and seuen great shot vpon the towne, which harmed not anie one creature, but a poore dog that was slaine before the doore of the regents house: although men, women, and children did dailie frequent and passe the stréets of the towne. Which was a rare matter, but yet not more strange than this: that there was not slaine on the regents part (from the first of the moneth of Januarie vntill this time, either by great or small shot in the towne or trenches, skirmishes or otherwise) aboue six persons, and within the castell but thrée, with as manie hurt betweene the tolbooth and the spurre of the castell. The cause whereof grew by reason of thrée trauerses made ouerthwart the stréets to saue the people, besides the other trenches made against the castell: at what time also the tolbooth and the church was fensed with a rampier forced of turffes, fagots, and other stuffe fit for that purpose. Whereby the lords of the parlement did as safelie assemble and sit in the tolbooth, and the people went as quietlie and safelie to the church to heare diuine seruice, as they at anie time did before the warres began, and before that the castell was besieged.

Skirmishes about Edenborough.

During which doings in the castell & the towne, there was an abstinence granted at the sute of the ambassadors of England for the duke and his adherents, vntill the foure and twentith of Februarie: in which meane time, certeine lords were appointed to conferre with the said ambassadors for an accord to be had betweene the king and imprisoned quénes faction. Whereupon sir James Balford came to the regents grace, obteined pardon for his offense, and earnestlie laboured to further this agrément. The earle of Argile was aduanced to the honour of the chancellorship. And Alexander Areskine maister of Marre was appointed to haue the kéeping of the kings person vpon certeine conditions, for the performance whereof he was to find foure sureties, lords of the parlement, to be bound for him bodie and lands, hauing fiftéene daies appointed vnto him to consider thereof, whether he would enter into so great a charge or no. And if in case he should refuse to accept the same, it was further resolued and concluded, that the erles of Glencarne and Bu-quhan, the lord Glanes, and maister Marshall should haue the keeping of the king quarterlie one after another. And if anie of the foure should happen, during the time of his quarterlie gouernement, to be sicke, or not able to execute that function; that then the lord Lindseie should be assistant to him in that gouernement, during that time. Which being thus on all parts concluded, James Kircawdie arriued in the Blackenesse in a small pinnesse, and entred the castell of Edenborough, with such monie as he had prouided to bring thither. Which occasioned the castell of Edenborough to be reassieged and inuironed both by sea and land, and was the cause that capteine Bruse sallieng forth with other of his companie to forage the countrie, and to prouide vittels, were taken by the regents companie. Notwithstanding all which, yet the others within the castell continued their purpose, and defended the same against the regent and his companie, farre otherwise than was supposed that either they could or would do.

Whereupon the regent of Scotland solicited the quéene of England, in the behalfe, and for the succor of the yong king of Scots hir cousine, thus grieuouslie molested with the warres of his owne people. So that the quéene of England sent a power of fiftéene hundred Englishmen to the siege of Edenborough castell, ouer whome sir William Drurie knight and marshall of Berwike was made generall, with such capteins as follow; which were sir Francis Russell knight, third sonne to Francis erle of Bedford with other capteins, as Read, Parleie, Wood, Brickwell, Pikeman, Gam, Case, Carew, Errington prouost marshall, Assoll, Stærleie capteine of the pioners, and capteine Barton. To whom also to serue at their owne free will these gentlemen of name, sir George Carie, sir Henrie Leie knights, Thomas Cicill eldest son of the lord tresuror of England, William Knolles, Sutton, Cotton, Kelwaie, Dier, Tilneie, William Killegrew, & manie other gentlemen of good estimation did associat themselues with conuenient number to attend vpon them. These with their generall passed from Berwike to Leith, where they met with maister Henrie Killegrew the quéene of Englands ambassador, whose care, trauell, & furtherance at that time deserued no small commendation; and with the Scotish nobilitie, & such as they had assembled to ioine with the English in the behalfe of the yong king against such as tooke part with the deposed quéene. Which Scotish nobilitie and gentlemen of Scotland were the earle Morton regent, and such other earles and gentlemen as were tied and alied to him by kindnes and kinred, and such as fauoured the yong king, distressed by the deposed quéene, as was pretended. After the ioining of these two nations, they on the fiue and twentith of Aprill marched towards Edenborough: and the same daie sir William Drurie the generall summoned the castell of that towne in forme as followeth.

The taking of Edenborough castell by the English and the regent of Scotland.

The summons giuen to the castell of Edenborough.

SIr William Kircawdie, sometimes of Grange knight, forsomuch as the queens maiestie my souereigne ladie, vpon the ernest request of hir dere cousin the king of Scots your souereigne lord made to hir highnes by his regent, nobilitie, & estates of Scotland, after all good meanes vsed to haue reduced you to a dutifull obedience of his authoritie by treatie, which hitherto you haue not dulie harkened vnto, to the onlie hinderance of the vniuersall peace in this realme, by withholding that his highnesse castell, meaning (as it séemeth) to reserue the same for a receptacle of forren forces, to the manifest dangers both of this realme and of my souereigns; and therefore necessarie to remoue so perilous a danger to both the realmes, For which consideration hir maiestie hath sent hir aid and succors, men, ordinance, and munition vnder my charge and leading, for the expugnation and recouerie of the said castell to the said kings vse and behoofe. And therefore, according to hir maiesties commandement and commission; this shall be in due maner to warne, require, and summon you, that you render and deliuer the said castell with the whole ordinance, artillerie, munitions, iewels, houshold stuffe, and such other implements within the same to me, and to the vse and behoofe of the king your souereigne and his regent in his name, immediatlie after this my letter of summons or knowledge of the same shall come to you. Which if you obeie, as of dutie you ought; then shall I in hir maiesties name interpone my selfe to trauell with the regent, councell, and nobilitie here for the safetie of your liues, &c: otherwise, if you continue in your former obstinacie, abiding the canon, then no further to looke for grace or fauor; but you and the rest within that castell, to be pursued to the vttermost, and holden as enimies to hir maiestie, your owne souereigne, and countrie. Giuen at Edenborough by me sir William Drurie knight generall of hir maiesties forces now in Scotland, this fiue and twentith daie of Aprill, in the yeare of Christ 1573.

This letter by the lord Grange capteine of the castell thus in due sort receiued, he not regarding the contents thereof, nor considering the mild disposition of such as went about to spare their bloud, did vterlie denie the surrender of the castell, and with all force determined to defend themselues. Wherewith the English generall greatlie grieued, did incontinently redeliuer such answer to the said lord Grange as wrought an vtter discontent and mislike in the man. By meanes of which the pioners attending their charge, with expedition applied the casting of trenches and erecting of mounts or fortresses to plant the artillerie therevpon against the castell. After which euerie one hastening the cause of his comming, & ioining their force together, began to inuiron the towne, & to laie siege to the castell in fiue seuerall places, where were fiue seuerall fortresses erected for that cause, intituled by these names. The first mount allotted to the regent, had the name of the kings mount, the second the generall thereof the English sir William Drurie did possesse, the third was in charge of sir George Carie, the fourth was called sir Henrie Leies mount, and the fift fell to the gouernement of Thomas Sutton maister of the ordinance in the north parts of England. The whole number of which armie vnder paie was two thousand, whereof fiftéene hundred were English, and the other fiue hundred Scots: besides the nobilitie and gentlemen with their companie, and the citizens of Edenborough defended with thirtie péeces of artillerie conteining sir canons, nine demicanons, nine culuerings, and sir sacres. Whilest the armie without was thus preparing for to assaile the companie within, the capteine of the castell (to hinder their worke) liberallie saluted the pioners & other soldiors with such artillerie as they had within the castell, and vpon and about the walles thereof; whereby manie were hurt, some slaine, but more hindered before the trenches and mounts might be brought to their due perfection, for defense of the assailants, and offense of the assailed. In which action also the aduerse part forgot not to requite the castillians, but mostlie after that the pioners and labourers had finished ſhed the mounts. At what time they gaue vehement and ſharpe aſſault to the caſtell, although that the extreame heat thereof began not vntill the ſeauentéenth daie of Maie following. In which ſiege on the ſaid ſeauentéenth daie of Maie, the caſtell was moſt roughlie aſſailed by thirtie ſhot of canon diſcharged againſt the ſame. At what time thoſe péeces ſo well perfourmed their parts againſt Dauids tower, that the force of the Engliſh canons was eaſie to be then and long after ſéene therein. Which aſſault continued vntill the one and twentith daie of Maie following, on which daie the whole batterie began not againe as before againſt part, but wholie round about on ech ſide of the caſtell. For vntill then Dauids towre was onelie the marke of the enimie: but after that daie they laid out their power in euerie place, offending and defending ech others ſoldiors, as well within the caſtell as within the mounts and trenches, in that ſharpe conflict hurting and killing manie of the Engliſh and Scots. Wherevpon the diligence of the Engliſh began to be ſo great, that they forthwith diſplaced the ordinance in the caſtell, and ſtroke one of their greateſt péeces iuſt in the mouth: whereby the ſame was broken, and the caſtillians force ſomewhat abated.

After this, on the ſix and twentith daie of the ſaid moneth of Maie, there was a freſh aſſault giuen at ſeuen of the clocke in the morning to the Spurre (a place of defenſe or blockehouſe before the ſaid caſtell) which by the aſſailants was taken, & forthwith vpon the entrance therin was the banner of the generall diſplaied and ſet vp, to declare who poſſeſſed the ſame, to the great diſcomfort of them in the caſtell. For although before they had loſt the vſe of one of their great péeces, that their walles were battered, that ſome of their men were ſlaine, & that they had almoſt all their water taken from them: yet would they not yéeld, neither did anie whit begin to deſpaire of kéeping the caſtell, or repelling the enimie; vntill ſuch time as the Engliſh had now gotten the poſſeſſion of the Spurre.

Now, during the time that theſe gaue the aſſault to the Spurre, there was an other band of Engliſhmen and Scots, that had in charge to make ſhew of a freſh aſſault, at the weſt part of the caſtell; to the end that ſuch as laied batterie to the Spurre, might with more eaſe to themſelues, and leſſe ſuſpicion of the aduerſe part, obteine the ſaid Spurre. But this laſt named band, ouer haſtilie putting themſelues in aduenture beyond the limits of their charge, were repelled and driuen to the recoile, with the hurt and loſſe of thirtie perſons, or thereabouts. All which notwithſtanding, the caſtillians (perceiuing their chiefeſt defenſe the Spurre to be loſt, and not greatlie reioiſing of this ſmall victorie ouer thoſe which aſſailed them on the weſt ſide) did the ſame daie by a drumme demand parlee: which they obteined with truce of peace from that daie, vntill the eight and twentith of Maie next following. For which cauſe the lard of Pittadrow was let downe by a rope from the caſtell, and after him the lard of Grange, capteine of the ſaid caſtell, with Robert Meluine; all which came to haue conference with the generall ſir William Drurie, & ſuch other perſons as were choſen to accompanie him about the ſame. In the end, vpon much conferrence had betweene the Scotiſh lards and the generall, the caſtell was the ſame eight and twentith daie (in which the truce ended) deliuered vp into the hands of the ſaid ſir William Drurie, which he kept in his poſſeſſion for a certeine time; during whoſe abode in the caſtell, he ſet vp and ſpred his enſignes and banners vpon ſundrie parts of the wals of the ſame.

This done, the generall (after quiet poſſeſſion had, not determining to reteine it vnto his miſtreſſe vſe, ſith he was onelie appointed by hir to aid the king of Scots, and ſuch of the nobilitie as toke his part) did after (according to his commiſſion) deliuer ouer the ſame caſtell to the vſe of the yong king of Scots; for which cauſe not meaning vtterlie to ſpoile the caſtell, he gaue but part of the ſpoile to the vſe of the ſoldiers, leauing the canons and other artillerie to the kings pleaſure. For before the ſurrender of the caſtell, it was agréed, that if the Engliſhmen had by force taken it, as they obteined it by compoſition, that then they ſhould wholie haue inioied the full ſpoile by the ſpace of thrée daies, the artillerie onelie excepted, which ſhould be carried awaie by the Engliſh. But ſith for theſe cauſes following, the ſame could not abide anie long ſiege, but muſt of neceſſitie yéeld it ſelfe, there was euerie part of the ſaid ſpoile giuen vnto the ſouldiers vpon the deliuerie of the ſame caſtell to ſir William Drurie. The cauſes of which ſurrender were manie.

First, for that they were depriued of water, becauſe the well within the caſtell was choked with the ruines of the caſtell wals; & the other well without could not ſerue them, becauſe there was a mount made to hinder them. An other water there was (which was vnknowne to ſuch as were without the caſtell) and was taken from them by the loſſe of the Spurre, out of which they were wont to haue a pint a daie for euerie ſouldier. The other cauſes of ſurrender were theſe.

Secondlie, diuerſe perſons were ſicke, eſpeciallie thorough drinke of the water of ſaint Margarets well without the caſtell on the north ſide, which had béene poiſoned by ſome of their enimies.

Thirdlie, diuerſe others were hurt.

Fourthlie, not manie to mainteine the caſtell, and they not able to take anie reſt, being ſo plied and dailie wearied with batterie.

Fiftlie, diuerſe of the ſouldiers diuided in opinions.

Sixtlie, ſome were no ſouldiers at all.

Seauenthlie, that no aid was to be looked for by the waie of France.

The eight and chiefe cauſe was, that the regent and his forces planted in the ſtrengths round about, and the horſſemen dailie and nightlie watching and riding, which held and toke from them all victtels, and had brought them to great ſcant of food before the ſiege began. All theſe eight cauſes moued the ſaid ſurrender of the caſtell.

After that the caſtell was thus gotten, the ſixtéenth daie of June following, the priſoners were deliuered by the ſaid ſir William Drurie, in the preſence of ſundrie Scots & Engliſhmen, vnto the regent; and that done, the ſame daie ſir William Drurie departed with his power to Berwike. The names of the priſoners were theſe; ſir William Kircawdie lard of Grange, and capteine of the caſtell of Edenborough, the lord Hume, William Metellan, lord of Lethington ſecretarie, the lard of Pittadrow conſtable of the caſtell, the counteſſe of Argile, the ladie of Lethington and the ladie of Grange, with others. But yet the priuat ſoldiers & others of meaner ſort were ſuffered to depart with bag and baggage.

Thus was the caſtell of Edenborough wone, as you haue heard, which by the common opinion of men was impregnable, and not to be taken by force; inſomuch as manie thought it toke the name of the maiden caſtell, for that it had not béene wone at any time before except by famine or practiſe. Which opinion being common is ſo much the falſer, in that the common ſort do imbrace it, for that they luſtlie incline to common fables. For this caſtell was not ſurnamed the maiden caſtell, becauſe it was neuer taken ken by force: but because the princes children were there nourished, as maie well appeare by that which I shall set downe touching the antiquitie of this towne & the name thereof; of which there be diuerse opinions. For some will haue it to be built by Eboracus, of some called Ebrancus king of Britaines, called also in British Castle mynid Agnes, the castell of saint Agnes hill, afterward the castell of virgins. But Lesleus will haue it built long after the time of H. Lhoid, by the space of six hundred foure score and foure yeares, for thus he writeth. Chrutneus Camelodunum primariam Pictorum vrbem & Agnedam postea Ethinburgum ab Etho quondam rege dictam, cum puellarum castro, vbi regis & nobilium Pictorum filiæ dum nuptui darentur, seruari, & præceptis ad humanitatem & virtutem informari solebant, condidit. A little before which, the said Lesleus writeth that Fergusius died Anno ante Christi in carnem aduentum 305, & that Hoc tempore Essadus Britonum & Chrutneus Camelonus Pictorum imperium tenebant. Now this king Chrutneus that built Agneda, liued before Christ three hundred and fiue yeares by the Scots account, and Eborac or Ebranke liued nine hundred foure score & nine yeares before Christ: so that the Englishmen make this towne more ancient than the Scots. But as Lesleus hath mistaken himselfe, following Boetius, to place Camelodunum in Scotland: so hath he appointed Edenburgh to be built by the Scots, being built by the Britaines. But true it might be that Eborac first builded it, & that being in the space of six hundred foure score and foure yeares wasted and vtterlie decaied, the same was afresh erected by Chrutneus, and after repared by Ethus. The castell of which towne, being sometime appointed for the bringing vp of the daughters of the noblemen of the Picts, vntill they were marriageable, was for that cause (and not because it was neuer woone by force) called the maiden castell, as the said Lesleus affirmeth. But after, when christianitie came into Scotland, it was called (as I coniecture) Agneda, because it was the castell that stood on saint Agnes hill, & not before the comming of Christ so called Agneda, as hitherto it hath beene set downe, but not rightlie; as I maie with reuerence speake vnder correction of such as by better authoritie can disproue that I saie.

The tragicall historie of the warres of the low countries lib. 3.

But here let vs a little leaue the countrie of Scotland, and such things as were there then done; and talke somewhat of the persons of that realme, who performed matter of valure in forren countries. Whilest the towne of Leiden was stronglie besieged (in the moneth of June) and that the townesmen (hauing a needfull and heedfull care) were altogither imploied about making of prouision of all such things as were deemed necessarie for the defense of the same towne; the principall part of the commandators armie arriued in Bommell quarters, Gorcum, and Lowiestein. Howbeit the prince and the estates of the low countries made no great account therof, by reason that Bommell (which was well furnished of all things necessarie for the wars) was vnder the custodie of capteine Bausoure, coronell of the Scotishmen, who had there attending on him the number of seauen Scotish ensignes. Which Scots desirous to performe some matter of valure, dailie sallied out of the towne with some of the citizens and gentlemen Hollanders; in which often issuing they valiantlie skirmished with the enimies. Whereby in the end amongest their sundrie conflicts there were manie warlike exploits performed by the Scots, which deserued not to be forgotten: as well for that they often repelled the enimie, and kept their strength togither; as for that they being few in number, aduentured (beyond the hope of good hap, by incountering with a greater troope of such as came against them, than they were themselues) either to returne victors, or to lose their liues.

The Scots repelled their enimies at Bommell.

After which also the same Scots, continuing in those low countries, performed manie other matters of martiall exploits, which I will set downe in this place. For sith I haue beene denied of some of the Scots (whom these annales chiefelie concerne) such things as might supplie the default of sufficient matter of Scotland to furnish the same; and for that I haue beene defrauded of the performance of promise made vnto me by manie others of that nation, who for dutie vnto that countrie ought, and for clearing some sinister opinion conceiued against them of their actions in their owne countrie should haue sought to further me in these my labours: I must leaue things done in Scotland, and turne my pen to other places; producing matter to helpe my barren discourse, which inforced therevnto doth deliuer an action performed by the Scots in the same low countries; where they which were then in seruice against the Spaniards, vnder the paie of the prince of Orenge, did that which deserueth not to be forgot.

The Scots denie their furtherance to the writing of the annales of Scotland.

These Scots therefore remaining in those countries, serving vnder the conduct of their coronell surnamed Bausoure, did in Januarie set forth & meet with the Spaniards at a place called the Footbale, distant not much more than a mile frõ Leige, where was a long and sharpe conflict betweene these two nations. In which by the successe of battell (for the most part yelding victorie vnto the stronger side) a great multitude of them were left dead in the place, and the rest driuen to saue themselues by flight from their enimies: who yet felt not this ouerthrow so sweet and gainefull, but that they lost manie of their people before the Scots were put to the worst.

The tragicall historie of the warres of the low countries lib. 4.

The Scots put to flight beside Leige.

But leauing these Scots in the midle of the wars of these countries vnder the prince of Orenge, we are to come to other matters following by succession of time, which hath deliuered to vs that Margaret the daughter & heire of Archibald Dowglasse earle of Angus, died in England the tenth of March in the yeare of our redemption 1577, beginning the yeare at the Annuntiation of the virgin. Which ladie being borne at Harbotell castell in England in the yeare of Christ 1515, was afterward brought vp in England; and then being priuilie affianced in the eight and twentith yeare of king Henrie the eight, being the yeare of Christ 1536, to Thomas Howard youngest brother to the duke of Northfolke, she was that yeare committed prisoner to the tower; but after set at libertie the last of October, in the nine and twentith yeare of king Henrie the eight, in the yeare 1537, & maried to Matthew Steward earle of Lennox by the consent of Henrie the eight king of England, in the yeare of our saluation 1544. After which, being tossed with both fortunes, sometime in aduersitie, & sometime in prosperitie, she was notwithstanding alwaies honorablie intertained in England, as both hir birth in respect of hir kinglie bloud, and hir calling in respect of hir place, did worthilie deserue. In the end, to cut off all hir other aduersities, and to draw to things falling in mine owne knowledge, she was on the two and twentith of April in the yeare 1565 (vpon the mariage of hir sonne Henrie Steward lord Darneleie vnto Marie Steward quéene of Scots) commanded by the quéene of England first to keepe hir chamber in the Whitehall the princes court and palace, where she remained vntill the two and twentith daie of June next insuing; and was then by sir Francis Knolles (one of the priuie councell and vicechamberleine to the quéene of England) and by some other of the gard conueied to the towre of London by water; in which place shé remained prisoner vntill

In which yeare, on the two and twentith of the ſame moneth, the ſaid ladie Margaret was diſcharged out of the towre and ſet at libertie, who ſtill remaining in England did (as before is ſaid) in the thrée ſcore & ſecond yeare of hir age, and in the ſirt yeare of hir widowhood, ſurrender hir ſoule to God, being moſt honorablie buried & anſwerablie to hir calling in the great chapell of Weſtminſter (built by Henrie the ſeuenth king of England) among the kings of that realme in an inward chapell ſtanding on the right & the ſouthſide of the ſaid great chapell. The yeare before whoſe death hir ſonne Charles Steward earle of Lennor (hauing before maried Eliſabeth the daughter of ſir William Candiſh, by whome he had iſſue Arbella) did alſo depart this life. Ouer the bodies of both which perſons, Thomas Fowler executor to the ſaid ladie Margaret, did with the goods of the ſaid ladie erect a coſtlie and ſtatelie towme of rich ſtone and curious workemanſhip, with the picture of that ladie, as liuelie, and as well coloured as art might afford it, about which monument is grauen this memorable epitaph declaring hir nobilitie, as inſueth.

At the head of the towme is ſet downe

Memoriæ ſacrum.

Margaretæ Dowglaſiæ, Matthæi Stuarti Leuiniæ comitis vxori, Henrici ſeptimi Angliæ regis exfiliæ nepti, potentiſſ. regibus cognatione conunctiſſimæ, Iacobi ſexti regis auiæ, matronæ ſanctiſſ. moribus, & inuicta animi patientia, incomparabili P.

Obijt Martij decimo Anno Domini 1577.

On the right ſide of which towme is this ingrauen.

Margareta potens, virtute potentior, ortu
Regibus ac proauis nobilitata ſuis:
Inde Calidonys auſtralibus, inde Britannis
Aedita principibus, principibuſque parens:
Quæ mortis fuerant ſolait lætiſſima morti,
Atque Deum petijt, nam fuit ante Dei.

Henrie ſecond ſonne to this ladie and father to James the ſirt now king. This Henrie was murdered at the age of one and twentie yeares, Charles the yongeſt ſonne was earle of Lennor father to the late Arbell. He died at the age of one and twentie yeares, and is here intomed.

On the left ſide of the towme is this ingrauen.

This ladie had to hir great grandfather king Edward the fourth, to hir grandfather king Henrie the ſeuenth, to hir vncle king Henrie the eight, to hir coſine germane king Edward the ſirt, to hir brother king James of Scotland the fift, to hir ſonne king Henrie the firſt, to hir grandchild king James the ſirt; hauing to hir great grandmother and grandmother two quéens both named Eliſabeth, to hir mother Margaret quéene of Scots, to hir aunt Marie the French quæne, to hir couſines germane Marie and Eliſabeth quéens of England, to hir néece and daughter in law Marie quæne of Scots.

At the foot of hir towme is this written.

Here lieth the noble ladie Margaret countеſſe of Lennor, daughter and ſole heire to Archibald Dowglaſſe earle of Angus, by Margaret quéene of Scots his wife, that was eldeſt daughter to king Henrie the ſeuenth, which bare vnto Matthew earle of Lennor hir husband, foure ſonnes and foure daughters.]

Which honourable towme, with theſe ſuperſcriptions, was erected for the ſaid ladie, and finiſhed in the yeare of our redemption 1578, being begun and almoſt perfected in the life of the ſaid ladie Margaret. This ladie being (as before is ſhewed) countеſſe of Lennor and Angus, it will not be amiſſe to declare in this place, what became of both the ſaid earledoms, as well in hir life, as after hir and hir ſonne Charls his death. Touching Angus, this ladie Margaret, vpon the mariage of hir ſon Henrie lord Darnelete, which was ſolemnized the nine and twentith daie of Julie 1565, to Marie quæne of Scots, did giue the ſaid earledome with all the rights and members thereof vnto the ſaid quæne Marie, to diſpoſe as ſell beſt vnto hir liking. Whereupon the ſaid quéene beſtowed that honour and earledome vpon Archibald Dowglaſſe couſine to the ſaid ladie Margaret: who being exiled, was here in England at the writing hereof. The earledome of Lennor, after the ſlaughter of Matthew earle of Lennor (husband to this Margaret) which was in Sterling the fourth of September, in the yeare of our redemption 1571, but 1572 as hath Leſleus, was inueſted in Charles James the ſirt king of Scotland, heire in bloud to the ſaid Matthew earle of Lennor, father to Henrie lord Derneleie (that maried the quæne) father to the ſaid James the ſirt. Whereupon the yong king, mindfull of the aduancement of his vncle Charles ſonne to the ſaid Margaret, did inueſt the ſaid Charls with the honour of the ſaid earledome of Lennor, which Charles died in the life of his mother Margaret without heire male, by reaſon whereof the ſaid earledome reuerted to the crowne.

But here leauing the title and ſucceſſion of the earles of Lennor to an other place following (ſith I am entered into the diſcourſe of ſuch of the earles & countеſſes of Lennor as be dead) I thinke it better in this place, than not at all, to mention the epitaph of Matthew earle of Lennor ſlaine at Sterling (as is before touched) in the yeare of Chriſt 1571. For although the ſame matter would more aptlie haue bæne placed before at the end of the hiſtorie of Scotland, written by Holinſhed, or at the begtnning of my continuance of the annales of that countrie, when I mention the death of the ſaid earle: yet ſith the note of that epitaph came not vnto my hands, vntill I had thus farre proceeded in the hiſtorie; and the ſame alſo at that time paſſed the print (whereby I could not ſet it downe in due place) I will here (hauing ſo good occaſion therfore) intreating of the towme of his wife (whoſe charge alſo wanted not in erecting of this towme of hir ſlaine husband, and for that this doth alſo touch ſome part of hir epitaph) inſert the ſame in this place after this maner, as it is written vpon the ſtatelie towme of the ſaid Matthew Lennor, and now ſtanding in the chapell within Sterling caſtell, being as hereafter foloweth.

The epitaph of Matthew earle of Lennox.

Lo here a prince and potentate,
whoſe life to vnderſtand,
Was godlie, iuſt, and fortunate,
though from his natiue land
His enmies thrice did him out thring, he thrice returnd againe,
Was lawfull tutor to the king,
and regent did remaine:
Where he with rigor rebels rackt,
the right for to defend,
Till enmies old through tyrans trackt,
did worke his fatall end.
Lo thus reſpects the death no wight,
When God permits the time,
Yet ſhall the vengeance on them light that wrought that curſſed crime.

Beſides which alſo on the ſame towme are theſe heroicall verſes ſet downe, declaring his name, his deſcent, his mariage, his iſſue, his offices, and ſuch other

ther matters belonging vnto him, as followeth.

Behold herein interred is,
Matthew of Lennox earle,
Who long of late in Britaine ſoile,
did liue a pearleſſe pearle.
And as he was of roiall bloud,
by roiall progenie,
From Stewards ſtocke of ancient time,
princes of Albanie:
His fortune was euen ſo to match,
with paſſing vertuous wight,
Whoſe race deriued from famous kings,
of wide renowmed might.
His mother queene of Scotland was,
and eldeſt daughter deare,
Of Henrie ſeuenth Engliſh king,
a princelie mirror cleare.
Hir father earle of Angus was,
ſhe ladie Margaret hight,
The onelie heire of Angus lands,
and all his fathers right.
Thus did king Brutus bloud conioine,
for both by grace diuine
Are come of Northwales princes hault, which were of Troians line.
And diuerſe goodlie imps there were,
that iſſued from them twaine:
Charls Iames now king, and *Charls the earle of them dooth ſtill remaine,
King Henrie father to this king,
their firſt begotten ſonne:
Oh cruell fates! the which ſo ſoone,
his vitall thred vnſponne,
By whoſe deuiſe the grandſire came,
lord regent in this land:
And noblie bare the regall ſword
of iuſtice in his hand.
Whereby he did in tender age
of the kings maieſtie,
This realme protect with fortitude,
prudence and equitie.
But now dame fame with flickering wings
withouten anie let,
Shall ſpread abrode this worthie man,
and through the world him ſet.
And tearing time ſhall not conſume,
nor weare the ſame awaie,
But with the worthieſt reckned be,
vntill the latter daie.
After which time, eternitie dooth triumph then by right:
Where he with angels ſhall reioiſe,
in Gods eternall ſight.

*This was Charles earle of Lennox buried in the towne which his grandmother the ladie Margaret Lennox before mentioned ſhe liued after the death of this Matthew his grandfather.

Beſides which Engliſh epitaph theſe verſes were alſo compoſed by Buchanan vpon the ſame earle of Lennox, wherein is not onelie ſet downe (as before) the honourable birth of the man, but alſo ſome of the places of his education, with other things which right fortunatlie happened vnto him in this ſort.

*James the ſixt king of Scots.

Thus ſetting end to the liues & deaths of this Matthew Steward erle of Lennor, of Margaret Dowglaſſe his wife, to their honourable epitaphs, and to their ſumptuous ſepulchres, we will come backe againe to ſuch others, either generall or ſpeciall, accidents as haue fallen in the kingdome of Scotland, and which will touch the vniuerſall gouernement, or the particular occurrents as well of Scotiſh as of other forren affaires managed by them at home, or in other countries, therwithall ioining the diſcourſe of ſuch things as haue beene performed by other nations in that kingdome. Amongſt which accidents in Scotland this rarelie happened, that the earle Morton ſurrendered his protectorſhip or regentſhip of the king and kingdome of Scotland. Which I maie worthilie count rare, ſith men in ſo great authoritie of commanding all perſons, can hardlie be brought to giue ouer ſuch honour, and to yeeld themſelues to the commandement of others, bicauſe Qui primatus ſui authoritatem perdit, in deſpectionem & anguſtiam ſe mittit: qui autem locum ſuum ſapienter cuſtodit, ſe ac ſuos ad profectum dirigit. And Bias the philoſopher knew, that it was a moſt hard thing of all other, and onelie sauouring of great magnanimitie and wiſdome, Fortiter ferre mutationes rerum in deterius. But he being verie wiſe, feared not the alteration of his eſtate, but rather deſired to be rid thereof, conſidering the weightineſſe and danger which depended therevpon, and remembring that notable ſaieng of Gregorie in his Morals, declaring the ſingular good of ſuch, which do ſhun the gouernement of temporall things, in theſe words. Quaſi quodam iugo ſeruitutis premunt proſpera, dum appetuntur; premunt aduerſa dum formidantur. At ſi quis ſemel dominationem deſideriorum temporalium à collo mentis excuſſerit, quadam iam etiam vitæ libertate perfruitur, & dum nullo deſiderio fœlicitatis afficitur, nullo aduerſitatis errore coarctatur.

Gl. ſuper ill eccleſ. 23 melius eſt ut filij.

This earle Morton (I ſaie) ſurrendred his office (as before is touched) in the moneth of March, in this yeare of our Lord one thouſand fiue hundred ſeuentie & ſeuen, at what time alſo Robert Bowes eſquier was then in Scotland for hir maieſtie of England. Upon the remouing of which erle Morton there were no more regents in that countrie, but the king toke vpon him to rule the realme by himſelfe & by ſuch curators as he ſhuld appoint therfore. For the king now about the twelfe yeere of his age thought he might aſwell take vpon him the gouernment of the countrie by himſelfe, and ſuch as he appointed at thoſe yeares, as manie of his anceſtors had done before in their yong yeares; notwithſtanding the opinion of manie of the better ſort of the preſbiterie, which maintaine that he cannot abſolutelie rule, or perfectlie eſtabliſh anie thing by the cuſtomes of their countrie, vntill he come to the age of fiue and twentie yeares. But we find in their owne hiſtories of Scotland, written euen by men of beſt iudgement, that James the ſecond of that name king of Scots, did in the fourteenth yeare of his age, in the ſeuenth yeare of his reigne, and in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand foure hundred fortie and foure, put Alexander Leuinſtone knight from his regentſhip, and toke vpon himſelfe the abſolute gouernement of the kingdome, of whom thus writeth Leſleus. Gubernatoris cancellariique concilio & iuſſu factum eſt, vt omnium ordinum comitijs Striueling indies diceretur. An. Dom. 440, menſe Ianuary, omnium aſſenſu eſt conſtitutum, vt rex ſuum regnum luſtrans, contentiones ſopiat, cauſas decidat, concrouerſias dirimat, reliquáq; reipublicæ negotia præſens procuret. Multi nobiles ſeſe comites itineris adiungunt, qui in illius ſocietatem ſe penitus immergentes, odij cancellarij ac gubernatoris elati, perſuadent regi, vt aliorum ſeruituti ſe premi diutius non ſinat: ſed vt omni iugo excuſſo, ipſe ſibi reipublicæ gubernandæ partes aſſumat. Is iuuenili quodam regnandi ardore incenſus, illorum voces tanquam Syrenum cantum in ſuas aures effluere liberaliſſimè patiebatur. Decimum iam quartum annum agens, in regium ſolium præceps irruit, ac vt publicis comitijs ſolus præeſſet, omnes ordines Striuelingum vocat, 4 Nouembris 1444.

The earle Morton ſurrendred his regentſhip.

The kings of Scotland take on them to rule the realme without procurators being within age.

Leſleus li. 8. pag. 295.

After

After which, about fiue yeares following, the ſame James, to ſhew his abſolute and ſufficient gouernement, did in the yeare of Chriſt 1449, in the nineteenth yeare of his age, and the twelfe yeare of his gouernement create Alexander Seton lord Gourdon earle of Huntleie, and George Leſle a baron earle of Rothſeie. James the fourth of that name king of Scotland, being but ſixteene yeares of age when he came to the crowne, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred foure ſcore & eight, adminiſtred the realme by himſelfe without any procurator, as I gather out of Leſleus. James the fift the king of Scots, in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand fiue hundred twentie and eight, in the ſeuentéenth yeare of his age, & about the fifteenth yeare of his gouernment, remoued the earle of Angus from the regentſhip, and toke vpon himſelfe the gouernment of the kingdome. And Marie the mother of the now liuing king of Scots, did in like ſort in the yeare one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and two, in the tenth of hir age, and as much of hir gouernment of Scotland apoint procurators to gouerne the realme, whileſt ſhe remained in France with the French king hir huſband. But enough of this, ſith Leſleus in his 9. booke pag. 429, and alſo in his 10. booke pag. 517, hath liberallie argued on both parts, at what yeares the kings of Scotland may aſſume to themſelues the gouernement of the kingdome, after that they haue atteined to the crowne in thoſe yeares, which are ouer tender and vnfit to diſpoſe of the ſword and ſceptor. Wherefore to paſſe ouer the ſame, I thinke it not vnmeet in this place, ſith we haue mentioned this Morton which was the laſt regent, gouernour or protector of the kingdome, to ſet downe a catalog of all ſuch regents and gouernours of that realme, as haue come to my knowledge, after the ſame ſort as I haue done in England at the end of the gouernement of the duke of Summerſet, who was the laſt protector of that realme: into the diſcourſe whereof I enter as followeth.

The protectors, gouernours, or regents of Scotland, during the kings minoritie or his inſufficiencie of gouernement, or during his abſence out of the realme.

Conanus. Conanus was gouernor vnder Thereus about the yeare before the birth of Chriſt, one hundred thirtie and ſeuen: for Thereus renouncing the kingdome and fleeing to Yorke, where in the end he died, this Conanus during the exile of this Thereus, was regent or gouernour, of whom writeth Leſleus lib. 2. pag. 89. Conanus qui rempublicam Therei iam exulantis loco optimè adminiſtraret, interrex à nobilibus declaratur. Nam Thereo viuo nullum alium regem ſubſtituere voluerunt, quo mortuo, Ioſina eius frater ſuffectus eſt.

Cadallus. Cadallus liuing about the yeare before the birth of Chriſt, ſeuentie and nine, did purſue Gillus (the baſtard of Euenus) hauing ſlaine the ſonne of Euenus, and vſurping the crowne, of whom thus writeth Leſleus lib. 6, pag. 92. Tandem auctore Cadallo viro fortiſſimo, qui interrex à regni nobilibus interea conſtitutus eſt, quidam in illum (which was Gillus) conſpirant, quem in Hiberniam profugam aſſecuti, inita prius pugna capiunt, & ſtatim capite plectuntur.

Argadus erle of Argile. Argadus earle of Argile, when Conar who began his reigne in the yeare of Chriſt one hundred fortie and eight, was caſt in priſon for his euill life, was by the nobilitie choſen gouernour of Scotland, after which Ethodius the next king, whome this Argadus holpe vnto the crowne made him chiefe iuſtice of Scotland to him and his heires, which function at this daie the earles of Argile do inioie by inheritance.

Donald, Colollan, Mordacke and Conrade were made gouernors of the kingdome, for thus writeth Leſleus lib. 4. pag. 198. Senectutis tandem tædio illius (which was Elphine who began his reigne about the yeare of Chriſt, ſeuen hundred thirtie and three) vires ita debilitatæ ſunt, & cum regni oneri ferendo impar fuerit, quatuor ſui regni regulos (in quibus præſtans quædam ſed fucata virtutis ſpecies eluxit) delegit, quibus ſingulis ſingulas prouincias decreuit; Donaldo Argadiam; Colano Atholiam; Mordaco Gallouidiam; & Conano Morauiam. Donald, Colollan, Mordacke, & Konrade.

William Fraiſer biſhop of S. Andrews, &c: after the death of Alexander the third king of Scotland, which fell in the yeare of our Lord, one thouſand two hundred foure ſcore and three, who died without iſſue, the nobilitie (becauſe it was not knowen to whome the kingdome did apperteine, ſith there were manie which claimed the ſame, as Baliol, Bruſe, Haſtings, and others) agréed amongſt themſelues, and choſe ſix regents or gouernors of the ſame, vntill a king were fullie known and eſtabliſhed: the names of which ſix were theſe, William Fraiſer biſhop of ſaint Andrewes, Duncane earle of Fife, John Cumine earle of Buchquane, to whome the rule of the north parts were committed. The other three were Robert biſhop of Glaſcow, ſir John Cumine, and James high ſteward of Scotland, who had the diſpoſition of the ſouth parts. William Fraiſer.

Hugh Creſſingham an Engliſhman was made gouernor of Scotland by Edward the firſt, who going into France about the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred ninetie and ſix, after that he had brought Scotland vnder his ſubiection, appointed the ſaid Hugh (whom he had before made treaſuror of Scotland) to haue the gouernment of that realme in his abſence, whileſt he was buſied in the wars of France. But not long after, this Creſſingham was ſlaine at Sterling by William Wallace (and ſuch Scots as attempted by all the force they could to ſet themſelues at libertie from the ſubiection of the Engliſh) in the ides of September, in the yeare of Chriſt, one thouſand two hundred ninetie and ſeuen, at what time alſo Andrew Murrete was ſlaine, whoſe ſonne did certeine yeares after (as hath Buchanan) adminiſter and gouerne Scotland for the king. Hugh Creſſingham. Buchan. lib. 8.

William Wallace after manie worthie exploits done in the behalfe of his countrie againſt the Engliſh, was for the Scots choſen gouernor of the realme vnder John Baliol, when the king had forſaken the realme and was come into England, about the yeare of Chriſt, one thouſand two hundred ninetie and ſix, who after that (as is before touched) did ſlea Creſſingham the gouernor of Scotland vnder the king of England, which Wallace did after in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred nintie and eight renounce his office of gouernor, and was in the end for his rebellion againſt king Edward the firſt king of England, and abſolute lord of Scotland, taken, brought to London, drawen, hanged and quartered, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand three hundred and fiue. William Wallace.

John Cumine, after that William Wallace had giuen ouer his office of gouernor, was choſen to be gouernor for the Scots, in purpoſe to trie with the Engliſhmen for their liberties, which being knowen to Edward the firſt king of England, he ſent an armie into the countrie, and deſtroied it. Wherupon John Cumine admitted Simon Fraiſer fellow with him in the adminiſtration of the wars againſt John Cumine.

the Englith, and diſcomfited the Engliſh in the yere of our Lord God one thouſand three hundred and two. After which, king Edward being againe a conqueror of the Scots, returned homewards, and left Odomare de Ualence his deputie in Scotland.

Odomare de Ualence or Aimer de Ualence.

Odomare de Ualence or Aimer de Ualence, vncle to king Edward the firſt king of England by the halfe bloud, was about the yeare of our Lord one thouſand three hundred and foure, made gouernor of Scotland vnder Edward the firſt king of England, who before in the yeare one thouſand three hundred & two, toke William Wallace and ſent him to London to king Edward, to be dealt withall as you haue heard before. After which Robert Bruſe being crowned king of Scotland, was on the nineteenth of June in the yére of Chriſt one thouſand three hundred and ſix, at Meſen diſcomfited by the Engliſh armie, and put to flight by the ſaid Odomare de Ualence, who after baniſhed all thoſe which ante waie toke part with king Robert Bruſe. But in the end Robert Bruſe recouering himſelfe & more aid, draue all the Engliſhmen out of Scotland, gouerning the kingdome all his life, by himſelfe & his ſubſtitutes, as by that which followeth maie well apeare.

Thomas Randolph.

Thomas Randolph earle of Murrete, much about the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand three hundred and ſix and twentie, being about the 21 yeere of Robert Bruſe, was made protector of the realme. For Robert Bruſe being fallen into extreme ſickneſſe, whereby he could not weeld the ſcepter to gouerne as the ſtate of that countrie required, cõmitted the adminiſtration of the reime to erle Thomas Randolph, and to James Dowglaſſe knight, who ruled the ſame to their ſingular commendation, and the countries good about foure yeares, during the life of the ſaid Robert Bruſe, whoſe death happened in the yére of Chriſt one thouſand three hundred twentie and nine. After the death of king Robert, when Dauid his ſonne came to the crowne, being but ſeuen yeares old, this Randolph was againe appointed to haue the adminiſtration of the kingdome as regent of the ſame, during the kings minoritie and inſufficiencie of gouernement, who confirmed a new peace betweene England and Scotland. Shortlie after which the gouernor died of poiſon at Muſcleborough, in the yere of our redemption one thouſand three hundred thirtie and one, being about the ſecond yeare of king Dauid, & was buried at Dunfermling, hauing had two ſons, John erle of Murreie, and Thomas, both being perſons worthie of ſuch a father.

Patrike Dunbar.

Patrike Dunbar earle of March was made regent after this ſort. After the death of earle Thomas Randolph, there was an aſſemblie of parlement of the three eſtates of the realme, in which in the ſaid yeare of Chriſt one thouſand three hundred thirtie and one, and the ſecond yere of the reigne of king Dauid, theſe two, Patrike earle of March and Dauid (whom Leſle calleth Donald) earle of Marre were choſen gouernors of the reime by common conſent. Whereof the firſt had the charge of that part of the reime which lieth on the ſouth ſide of the Frith, & the other was appointed to gouerne all that on the north: which Donald in the yere of Chriſt one thouſand three hundred thirtie and two was ſlaine ſléeping in his bed at Duplin neere to the water of Erne, by ſuch as followed and toke part with Edward Baliol atteining the crowne, and expelling Dauid from the kingdome.

Andrew Murreie.

Andrew Murreie, a man of great power, and of no leſſe poſſeſſion, hauing performed manie exploits of warre for his countrie, was made gouernor after the death of the earle of Marre, and ioined in that office with Patrike of Dunbar earle of March. Shortlie after which this Andrew was taken priſoner at Rocksborough, being yet in the end ranſomed for a great ſumme of gold. After which he died of a vehement ſickneſſe, and was buried in Roſe Parkie, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand three hundred thirtie and eight.

Archibald Dowglaſſe, after the deceaſe of Andrew Murreie, was by one conſent of the nobilitie choſen gouernor in the place of Andrew Murreie, whileſt king Edward did beſiege Berwike, who raiſing a power of men entred England, and cauſed the king to remoue his ſiege of Berwike. Afterward this Dowglaſſe was ſlaine at the battell of Halidon hill, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand three hundred thirtie and two (as ſome haue) but Hector Boetius and Buchanan refer it to the yeare of our Lord God one thouſand three hundred thirtie and three, the nineteenth of Julie. Archibald Dowglas.

Dauid Cumine was made protector in this ſort. When that Edward the third king of England, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand three hundred thirtie and ſix had entred Scotland with maine force by land and by ſea; he afterwards hauing Edward Baliol the king of Scotland in his companie with 50000 men came by land to Glaſcow: but perceiuing no reſiſtance againſt him, retired with Baliol into England, and left Dauid Cumine earle of Atholl gouernor in his roome, to win ſuch holds and ſtrengths as were yet defended againſt him. Which Dauid toke on him to be gouernor in the name of Edward Plantagenet king of England, and of Edward Baliol king of Scots, ſeizing into his hands all the lands which perteined to Robert Steward, ſo that at one time there was chopping and changing of gouernors by each part which became ſtronger. Dauid Cumine.

Robert Steward regent of Scotland poſſeſſed that place, at this time alſo when Dauid Cumine was gouernor for Edward Baliol; for this writeth Leſleus li. 7. pa. 234. Verùm ne patria gubernatoris imperio deſtituta, aduerſariorum inſidijs pateret magis, Robertus Stuartus omnem regni curam in ſe tranſtulit, quoad Dauid ex Gallia rediret, ipſe tũc regni gubernacula ſuſcepturus. By which words appeareth, that as Dauid Cumine was gouernor for Edward Baliol gone into England, ſo this Robert Steward toke vpon him the regentſhip for king Dauid Bruſe fled into France: the which he the rather did, becauſe he would incounter Dauid Cumine which had ſpoiled him of all his liuings and patrimonie. Which Robert being thus procurator of the kingdome, granted ſundrie priuileges to the inhabitants of Bute & Arrane, as amongſt other things, to be free from paieng of tribute of corne and graine. For this Steward togither with John Randolph earle of Murreie, were by a councell aſſembled at Edenborough by generall voices elected and confirmed to be gouernors of the realme, about the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand three hundred thirtie and foure, or one thouſand three hundred thirtie and fiue. Robert Steward. John Randolph earle of Murreie protector.

Robert Steward earle of Fife, ſecond ſonne to Robert Steward the firſt king of Scotland (by the name of Steward) and the ſecond by the name of Robert, was (becauſe his father became extreme old, and could not follow the affaires of the kingdome) made gouernor by the conſent of the realme during the life of his father, about the yeare of our Lord God one thouſand three hundred foure ſcore and nine, being about the nineteenth yeare of the reigne of the ſaid Robert the ſecond: which office this Robert continued during the life of his father, dieng in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand three hun- Robert Steward.

dred & ninetie. After whoſe death, when Robert the third, being before called John, came to the kingdome, and had by a fall from his horſſe ſo bruſed himſelfe, that he was not able to follow the gouernement of the kingdome, this Robert earle of Fife his brother was made gouernor of the kingdome. After which about the yeare of our redemption one thouſand three hundred ninetie and eight, being about the ninth yeare of Robert the third king of Scotland, the king created this Robert Steward duke of Albanie, being one of the firſt dukes which were made in Scotland. Beſides which alſo, after the death of the ſame Robert the third, which fell in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand foure hundred and ſix, this Robert duke of Albanie was by new election, or rather confirmation eſtabliſhed in the office of gouernor (as haue ſome Scotiſh chronicles) which duke of Albanie died in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand foure hundred and nineteene, the third of September, when he had béene gouernor fiftéene yeares after the death of Robert the third. Wherein it ſeemeth to me for this time that there is much difference of yeares, if the Scots haue truelie ſet the ſame downe: for thoſe accounts can not ſtand together, with the death of king Robert the third, and the yeares gouernement of the duke of Albanie, after the death of the king. But I paſſe it ouer, and rather impute the fault to the offendor, in miſtaking the figure of the number of yeares, than anie want of conſideration in the writer of the hiſtorie.

Murdacke Steward.

Murdacke Steward erle of Fife & Menteith, the eldeſt ſonne of Robert duke of Albanie, was after his fathers death made gouernor of Scotland, continuing in that office by the ſpace of foure yeares, vntill about the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred twentie and foure, in which yeare he found meanes to bring home James the right king of Scots, who had béene eightéene yeares deteined in England, and placed him in the kingdome of Scotland, by the name of James the firſt: at what time the crowne was ſet vpon the kings head with the hands of the ſaid Murdacke the gouernor, & Henrie biſhop of ſaint Andrews. This duke was in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred twentie and ſix, and in the ſecond yeare of the reigne of James the firſt conuicted of high treaſon, and beheaded before the caſtell of Sterling. He had iſſue two ſons, Walter Steward, and Alexander, which were alſo beheaded at the ſame place the daie before the death of their father.

Alexander Leuingſtone.

Alexander Leuingſtone knight was made gouernor the daie after that James the ſecond was crowned, in the yeare of our Lord God one thouſand foure hundred thirtie & ſix: for the king being but ſix yeares old, the nobilitie did appoint the ſaid Alexander Leuingſtone of Calender knight to be gouernor of the realme: at what time the kings perſon was committed to the education and rule of William Creicton.

William Creicton knight lord chancellor, who was then confirmed in his office. After this in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand foure hundred fortie and foure, about the eight yere of James the ſecond, they both (through diſſention which had long continued betweene them about their authorities) were put from their offices, remoued from the king all their friends, baniſhed the court, and they themſelues commanded to appéere before the king: which becauſe they refuſed ſo to do, they were both proclamed rebels and put to the horne.

Marie.

Marie the daughter of the duke of Guelderland & widow to James the ſecond, was appointed with others to be gouernors: for after the death of James the ſecond, which fell in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred and three ſcore (when James the third hir ſonne was but ſeuen yeares old) the nobilitie aſſembled at Edenborough to prouide for the adminiſtration of the realme, becauſe the king was ſo yong. Whereupon there were ſeuen regents appointed for the gouernement both of the kings perſon, and alſo of the kingdome, which were Marie the quéene his mother, James Kennedie biſhop of S. Andrews, being ſiſters ſonne to James the firſt, the biſhop of Glaſcow, the earles of Angus, Huntlie, Argile, and Orkenie. Theſe ſo long as Kennedie liued, agréed well togither about the gouernment of the realme; but ſhortlie after his deceaſe, or rather before, they fell at ſquare, which we will more largelie touch hereafter when we haue a little ſpoken of the death of this biſhop, falling in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand foure hundred three ſcore and ſix, and in the firſt yeare of the reigne of king James the third, who being buried in the college of ſaint Sauior which he founded moſt ſumptuouſlie in the towne of ſaint Andrews, did in his life time beſides his biſhoprike hold in his poſſeſſion the commandrie of the abbete of Pettinwen, which was worth vnto him 800 crownes by yeare: the grauitie and wiſdome of which biſhop occaſioned Leſleus in his commendation to ſet downe theſe few words.

Hic (which was this biſhop of ſaint Andrews) prudentia conſilióque ita valuit, vt quicquid latebat in republica inſidiarum, apperiret, vnde meritò poteſt dici, non armis regem, ſed ingenio epiſcopum Douglaſij ſuperbiam fregiſſe, ac furorem retudiſſe. Tria confecit (quorum fabrica artificio inſigniter polita, & ſumptu magnificè inſtructa, omnibus admirationem ſui faciebant) collegium ſancti Saluatoris, in quo iuuentus ad eruditionem ac religionem informari poſſit; ſepulchrum quo mortuus tegebatur, ac nauim onerariam ingentis magnitudinis. Horum vnumquódque eiuſdem fuiſſe pretij vulgi ſermone celebratum eſt. After his death, or rather (as hath Hector Boetius) in his life, in the ſecond yeare of the reigne of king James the third, being in the yeare that the word became fleſh one thouſand foure hundred three ſcore and two, there was diſcord kindled betweene quéene Marie the Dowager, and the archbiſhop Kennedie, who perceiuing that the woman did wholie séke to vſurpe the gouernement vnto hir ſelfe, withſtood it in that behalfe, inſomuch that it was doubted that the matter would haue broken forth into ſome ciuill warre, if that the biſhops of Glaſcow, Dunkeld, and Aberden, with certeine abbats had not taken in hand to trauell betwixt both the parties for attonement, who wrought ſo effectuouſlie therein, that the matter was quieted in this maner. The quéene mother was appointed to haue the charge and cuſtodie of the kings perſon, and of his brethren Alexander duke of Albanie, and John earle of Marre, and alſo of their two ſiſters. But as for the adminiſtration and gouernement of the realme of Scotland, ſhe ſhould leaue it to the péeres, wherefore by common conſent there were elected as gouernors the biſhops of Glaſcow, and Dunkeld, the earle of Orkenie, the lord Graham, Thomas Boid, and the chancellor.

Margaret.

Margaret the daughter to Henrie the ſeuenth king of England was (after the death of hir huſband James the fourth, and in the minoritie of hir ſonne James the fift, being but a yeare and ſix moneths old when he was inueſted with the kingdome) made regent of the realme, which ſhe ſhould gouerne by the counſell of James Betune archbiſhop of Glaſcow, the earles of Huntlie, Angus, and Arrane, but shortlie after they falling out amongst themselues for the bestowing of benefices, the duke of Albanie was called out of France to performe that office.

John duke of Albanie.

John duke of Albanie being sent for out of France (where he accustomed to abide) to come into Scotland (to be tutor to the king and gouernor of the realme, as he which next of bloud to the king, and nerest to the crowne) was by vniuersall consent at saint Johns towne admitted to those offices accordinglie, hauing the same confirmed vnto him by a parlement holden at Edenburgh in the yeare of Christ one thousand fiue hundred and thirteene, and the first yeare of the yong king James the fift. Whereof intelligence being brought vnto the duke, yet in France, he in the yeare of Christ one thousand fiue hundred and fourteene, directeth dilatorie and excusing letters of his acceptance of that charge. At that time, but in the yere following, being the yeare of Christ, one thousand fiue hundred and fiftéene, and in the third of James the fift, on the seuentéenth of Maie, he arriued at the towne of Aire in Scotland to execute his office of gouernor, who was honorablie interteined at sundrie places as he passed along by the sea coasts, before he came to Edenburgh. After which a parlement was made to be called at Edenburgh (being but the continuance of the former parlement, as my memorie serueth) in which this duke of Albanie was againe confirmed gouernor, the scepter and sword being deliuered vnto him, and an oth by him to the lords, and by the lords to him giuen, that ech of them should be faithfull to ech other, and euerie of them to their lord and king, &c. After this the duke of Albanie going into France in the yeare of Christ one thousand fiue hundred and seuentéene, as saieth Lesleus, committeth the gouernement of the kingdome in his absence to the archbishops of S. Andrews and Glascow, and to the earles of Huntlete, Argile, Angus, and Arrane. And least ante euill might happen to the kings person in his absence, he appointed the king to be brought into the castle of Edenburgh, there to be committed to the earle marshall, and to the lords Eschwine, Bothwike, and Ruthwéene, whereof two at the least should alwaies be present with him. The duke hauing thus béene about some three yeares in France, returned into Scotland about the yeare of Christ one thousand fiue hundred and twentie, remaining still gouernor: but in following time, which was the yere of Christ one thousand fiue hundred twentie and foure, and about the twelfe yeare of the reigne of king James the fift, the duke of Albanie left that office, and went againe into France.

Margaret the quéene.

Margaret the quéene, the mother of James the fift, did (after the departure of the duke of Albanie into France, in the yeare of Christ one thousand fiue hundred twentie and foure, the sir and twentith of Julie) find meanes that the yong king came from Sterling vnto Edenburgh: three daies after which the quéene toke the whole gouernment vpon hir, and entred into the castle of Edenburgh with the king, making the lord Maxwell prouost of Edenburgh. Then the quéene appointing a parlement to be held the Februarie following, there were in the same parlement eight lords chosen to be of the kings priuie councell, to take on them the gouernment of the king and the realme, which were the archbishop of S. Andrewes and Glascow, the bishops of Aberden & Dunblane: the earles of Angus, Arrane and Leneur, to whom the quéene was adioined as principall, without whose aduise nothing should be done. Which ordinance did not long hold, Archibald Dowglasse earle of Angus in the end fullie getting the whole gouernement into his hands.

Archibald Dowglas (after that the bishop of Dunbane was dead, and the quéene gone vnto Sterling, leauing the king with the earle of Angus, in the yeare of Christ one thousand fiue hundred twentie and fiue, being about the thirteenth of James the fift) toke the whole gouernement vpon him both of the king and kingdome, setting vp, remouing, and pulling downe what officer it best pleased him: who for the more declaration of his authoritie and gouernment, made his vncle Archibald Dowglas treasuror of the realme, and bestowed all benefices and offices by the aduise of his brother George Dowglas and the earle of Leneur who assisted him. After which there was a diuorce had betwéene the quéene and the earle, who falling in the kings disgrace in the yeare of Christ one thousand fiue hundred twentie and eight, and the sirteenth yeare of the same James the fift, was atteinted by parlement holden at Edenburgh in September, when the king had taken the absolute gouernment into his hands in the seuentéenth yeare of his age, and the said sirteenth yeare of his said gouernement. Whereupon the yeare following, this Archibald came vnto the king for to submit himselfe, but the king would not receiue him, by reason wherof he fled into England.

Archibald Dowglas.

James earle of Arrane in the yeare of Christ one thousand fiue hundred fourtie and two, when Marie (the daughter of James the fift) being but seuen daies old obteined the kingdome, was by authoritie of the nobilitie proclamed regent and protector of Scotland, notwithstanding all that Dauid Beton, fauorer of the French causes had without all reason vsurped the gouernment, vnder the pretense of a deuised will and testament of James the fift, in which testament he was appointed gouernor. This earle thus made protector, appointed by the old quéenes consent a gouernor to the person of the yong quéen, which was the lord Leuingstone capteine of Lithquo. This protector in the yeare of Christ one thousand fiue hundred fortie and foure, being the second yere of quéen Marie, was by the French king made knight of the order of saint Michaell. About eight yeares after which, that is in the yeare of Christ one thousand fiue hundred fiftie and three, being about the twelfe yeare of quéene Marie, this earle was inforced to leaue his office of gouernor, and the quéene toke the same into hir hands, appointing procurators to rule the same vnder hir: whereupon the gouernor in the yeare following, being one thousand fiue hundred fiftie & foure, was by the French king made duke of Chatelerault. The procurators which were appointed for and by quéene Marie, were (as hath Lesleus) Henrie king of France, Charles cardinall of Lorreine and the duke of Guise his brother, touching whom thus writeth the same Lesleus in these words: Hos (which was hir curators) sibi in Gallia delegerat regina nostra (being Marie the quæne of Scots) matris suasu, Henricum regem Franciæ, Carolum cardinalem Lotharingum, ac ducem Guisium eius fratrem, qui totam regni nostri molem reginæ matri procurandam transtulerunt: &c. This duke had issue James Hamilton earle of Arrane after lunatike, and one Dauid Hamilton.

James earle of Arrane.

Lesleus lib. 10. pag. 517.

Marie descended of the house of Guise, the dowager of Scotland, as widow to James the fift, and mother to the yong quéene Marie, was in the yeare of Christ one thousand fiue hundred fiftie and foure, being the twelfe yeare both of the age and reigne of the same quéene Marie, made regent of Scotland vnder hir daughter the same yong quéene, which office office this regent toke vpon hir haning the ſame confirmed by parlement, continuing in that place abont ſix yeares, & died in the caſtle of Edenburgh, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred and thrée ſcore, being vpon the point of the eightéenth yeare of quéene Marie, whoſe bodie (as hath Leſleus) was after caried into France, for thus he writeth:

Leſleus lib. 10. pag. 569. Fuit autem corpus in Galliam poſtea tranſuectum, primùm ad monaſteriũ Feckamenſe, quod in Normania eſt, deinde ad cœnobium S. Petri Rhemis in Campania, cui ſoror ipſius piè tunc præerat, delatũ, honorificè condebatur.

James Steward. James Steward baſtard ſonne to king James the fift king of Scots, and baſe brother to Marie quéene of Scots now liuing and impriſoned, being prior of ſaint Andrews and earle of Mar, was in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred thrée ſcore and two, being about the twentith yeare of the reigne of the ſame quéene Marie, made earle of Murreie. About fiue yeares following, after that the nobilitie had conſpired againſt quéene Marie, toke hir, committed hir to priſon, depoſed hir, and vpon the ſame (on the nintéenth daie of Julie in the yeare a thouſand fiue hundred thrée ſcore and ſeuen, being the fiue & twentith yeare of the reigne of that quéene) aduanced hir ſonne Charles James Steward (being then about a yeare old) to the kingdome, by the name of James the firt: this James earle of Murreie, was made regent and gouernor of the yong king James the firt, and of the kingdome: who vpon the office receiued, did by parlement abolith the popes authoritie and doctrine in Scotland: continuing that office of regent vntill his death, falling about the time of thrée yeares after. For in the time of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred thrée ſcore and ten, being in the third yeare of the reigne of James the firt, this regent as he was riding through Lithquo, was ſhot at with an harquebus by one James Hamilton, and ſo wounded, that he died of the hurt the nert daie following, hauing before in that yeare, in which he was created earle of Murreie, maried Agnes Keith daughter to the earle Marſhall.

Matthew earle of Leneux. Matthew earle of Leneur, being ſent for out of England, where he had before long remained, was after the death of the earle of Murreie, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred thrée ſcore and ten, being in the third yeare of the reigne of James the firt, made lord lieutenant or protector of Scotland, in a conuention of the lords of Sterling. After which in Auguſt following, there was another conuention at Edenburgh, where by the conſent of the thrée eſtates of the realme, the ſaid earle was made regent of Scotland, at what time the earle of Huntleie toke vpon him to be lord lieutenant of Scotland: for Marie quéene of Scots remaining then vnder cuſtodie in England, which Huntleie in hir name ſummoned a parlement at Lithquo the 21 daie of September, whereunto the earle of Leneur was ſummoned: to incounter which, the earle of Leneur cauſed a parlement likewiſe to be ſummoned in the kings name at the ſame place, whervnto the earle of Huntleie was warned at the ſame daie. But the earle of Huntleie comming no nérer at that time than Bzechin, it was ordered by the regent Leneur and the nobilitie, to purſue him: whereupon inſued great warres betwéene the nobilitie of Scotland diuided into factions, ſome taking part with the depoſed queene Marie, and other with the yong king in poſſeſſion. During which turmoiles and wars, this earle of Leneur hauing bin regent about a yeare and more, was wounded at Sterling with a piſtoll by capteine Cawder, whereof he ſhortlie after died, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred thrée ſcore and eleuen, being about the fourth yeare of James the firt.

John Areſkin earle of Mar was made regent after the death of the earle Leneur, as maie appeare by that which I haue before ſet downe in the continuance of the annals of Scotland, after whome ſucceéded the earle Morton, of whome I haue a little before ſpoken, and of whome we will more intreat heraſter, when we come to ſpeake of his beheading, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred fourteſcore and one, falling about the fourtéenth yeare of Lewes the firt, after that the ſaid earle had continued that office about fiue yeares. For being aduanced to that place, about the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred thrée ſcore and twelue, he continued in the ſame, vntill he ſurrendered it, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred thrée ſcore and ſeuentéene, as is before touched. Thus ſetting end to the diſcourſe of the protectors of Scotland, let vs deſcend to other matters which haue ſucceéded.

John Areſkin earle of Mar.

Earle Morton regent of Scotland.

Going therefore forward with that yeare one thouſand fiue hundred thrée ſcore and ſeuentéene, we ſate that much about the time in the which the earle Morton gaue ouer his regentſhip, that the lord Glames, who was then in office of the chancellorſhip, was trecherouſlie ſlaine by his enimies at Sterling, with a ſhot of purpoſe diſcharged againſt him, as he was comming out of Sterling caſtell, & going to his owne lodging from the councell or parlement. Whereby it ſeemeth that this murthering by ſudden ſhot began now to be a common thing: for there were thrée great perſons in ſhort time diſpatched after that ſort, which were the earles of Murreie and Leneur regents, & this lord Glames chancellor. After the death of which lord Glames, the earle of Atholl was aduanced to that place, and inueſted with the title of lord chancellor of Scotland. Wherefore, hauing ſo good occaſion therefore at this time by talking of this earle of Atholl thus made lord chancellor to treate of that office: I thinke it not inconuenient in this place, nor diſagreéable to the nature of the matter which I haue in hand, ſomewhat by waie of digreſſion, to diſcourſe of the originall of this office in Scotland, which I will do in few words.

The lord Glames chancellor ſlaine.

The earle of Atholl made chancellor.

This officer the chancellor had his firſt originall in Scotland by Malcolme the ſecond of that name king of Scots, who begining his reigne in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand and ten, and gouerning thirtie yeares, departed the world in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand and fortie. This man, during the time of his gouernment, ordeining manie neceſſarie laws for the better rule of his countrie, and for the benefit of the crowne, did alſo firſt ordeine the honorable officers of the kingdome, as chancellor, conſtable, marſhall, chamberleine, and others, as appeareth by Leſleus in his hiſtorie of Scotland in theſe words: Fœliciter rempublicam haud paucos annos adminiſtrauit (king Malcolme) multis & egregijs operibus illuſtris: intérque cætera municipialium legum volumen condidit, quas noſtrates exinde in iudicijs ferendis ſeruarunt, nihil pene immutatas, regiorum magiſtratuum iudicúmque, quos licet mundiùs, magiſque Latinè vocare poſſunt, vulgò tamen cancellarium, conſtabilem, mariſcallum, camerarium, iuſticiariúmque vocitant, & qui a ſecretis, a theſauris, a cubiculo, a chartophylaceo eſſent: cunctorúmque miniſtrorum aulæ annua ſalaria, vt noſtris diebus penduntur, quantumque regijs pro diplomatibus, ac cæteris literis, libellionibus, tabularijs, lectoribúſque ſoluendum foret, inſtituit. This officer being in Scotland before the time of Edward the confeſſor, ſeemeth alſo to me co-uertlie to proue, that the same officer was in England before the time of the same king, sith it appeareth, that the Scots for the most part haue alwaies taken their maner of gouernement, lawes, and customes from vs, as will be I doubt not sufficientlie proued, although it mate be that some will affirme that they might haue this officer from the Frenchmen & Romans as other nations had: which as I dō not suppose, because the Romans had but little dowings amongst them, for as they neuer vsed anie such officer in this land whilest they gouerned here (for anie thing that I can yet learne) so it maie be, (because they will not seeme to haue borrowed anie order of their gouernement from vs) that they will suppose that they had the first ground of this officer from the French, with whome they haue alwaies bæne in league euer since the time of their king Achaius the first, who (beginning his reigne in the yeare of Christ seuen hundred fourescore and eight) did knit a perpetuall league with Charles the great. But leauing this, we saie (more particularlie treating of Scotland) that much about this time, John Lesle bishop of Rosse (who had some yeares before bæne some certeine time imprisoned in the Tower of London in England, and had trauelled to Rome about the affaires of the imprisoned quæne of Scotland, where he labored to procure such aid for hir, as the princes which fauored hir faction would yéld) did depart from Rome, and went from the pope to Randulph, as the second of that name now emperor. Which said Lesle, taking his iourneie out of Italie, passed through the frontier townes of Germanie, and was staied at Platzburgh, otherwise called Palatinopolis, by George duke of Bauier, countie Palatine of Rhene, and earle of Veldezens; in which citie, his coffers and other things were rifled and searched: at what time there were manie writings found, and amongst others certeine papers, in which did appeare what friends the quæne of Scots had of all the parts of Europe, what enimies, and what neutrals: with letters and other instructions of Philip king of Spaine.

All which notwithstanding (though they gaue the said George occasion to mistrust Lesle, as an enimie to his religion) this bishop of Rosse was afterward dismissed, because he was furnished with the emperors passport, or safeconduct to come vnto him. Wherefore the duke of Bauier for his better discharge, and to manifest to the world that they did nothing but that, which both the present estate of these troublesome times, and the dutie of a religious prince required, did honorablie dismisse the said Lesle, bearing all his charges, restoring all his goods, & conueieng him out of his dominions with a goodlie companie of horsemen, after that he had caused the said bishop of Rosse to leaue a testimoniall writing in the Latine tong vnder his owne hand, to shew that no iniurie was done to the said bishop, in that his deteining and search for those causes; & that the bishop should not anie waie seeke anie reuenge thereof: the copie of which writing (as I receiued the same) I haue faithfullie and verbatim set downe in this sort.

Iohannes Leſleus epiſcopus Roſſenſis & adminiſtrator eccleſiæ Morauenſis.

This Leſle being yet liuing, and (as I vnderſtand) in great credit in France, poſſeſſing the place of the chancellor of Lions, is deſcended of an ancient familie, as one whoſe anceſtors and name hath both intoled honorable titles in deſcent, and great places of gouernement in the common-wealth of Scotland. For when Edgar the ſonne of Edward the outlaw and kinſman to Edward the Confeſſor king of England was vexed with vnluſt war, firſt by Harold king of England the ſon of Godwine, & then by the Norman baſtard ſurnamed the Conqueror, which ſlue Harold and obteined the crowne of England; Edgar did priuilie take ſhipping with his mother Agatha, and his two ſiſters, to the end, that being now out of all hope euer to obteine the kingdom of England, they might direct their courſe and ſaile againe into Hungarie, from whenſe they came. But it happened by diuine prouidence, that being on the ſea, they were grieuouſlie moleſted with vehement winds, which forciblie made them forſake their appointed courſe, and draue them into the mouth of the riuer of Forth or Frith, whoſe landing place is yet to be ſeene, & at this daie called S. Margarets hauen (after the name of hir which was ſiſter to this Edgar & called Margaret) whome Malcolme king of Scots (for the rare parts both of bodie & mind wherwith ſhe was wonderfully indued) did after take to wife, & ſolemnlie crowned to the great comfort of the whole kingdome. Upon which déed William the Conqueror, being more grieuouſlie mooued than he was before, baniſhed all the friends of Edgar out of England. By occaſion whereof, Lindſeie, Vaus, Ramſeie, Louell, and diuerſe other men of great nobilitie came then firſt into Scotland to craue aid of king Malcolme; which perſons being liberallie indued with rich poſſeſſions by the ſame Malcolme; their poſteritie do at this daie in our age flouriſh with great honor. Beſides which alſo, at this time there came out of Hungarie with Agatha before touched diuerſe other perſons of account, as Crichton, Fodringham, Gifkert, Manlis, Brothike, and others; amongſt whome Bartholomew Leſle deſcended of noble parentage, and of great valor of mind, did with the reſt appeare verie famous, whoſe ſharpe wit, and excellencie of knowledge (ioined with a ſound and ſtrong bodie) when Malcolme the king of Scots did behold, he vſed his helpe in the defenſe of the caſtell of Edenburgh, and in all other weightie affaires which concerned the warres.

Out of this familie of the Leſles haue ſprong and flouriſhed manie worthie perſons, valiantlie reſiſting and ſubduing their enimies. And amongſt thoſe, one Walter Leſle earle of Roſſe, who afterward purchaſed ſuch ſingular commendation for valor and wiſedome ſhewed in manie battels of the emperor Lewes the ſecond, & Charles the fourth, againſt the Saracens, Vt (one of their owne name now a biſhop of Roſſe in his hiſtorie of Scotland ſaieth) à quodam animi generoſo impetu, quo hoſtes frãgere, & ſub iugũ fortiter mittere ſolebat, generoſi equitis cognomentum ſit conſecutus: eiuſdem ſtirpis comes Rotheſius, multíque alij barones & equites Leſlei cognominati (quos Malcolmus primùm, ac alij deinde reges multis amplíſque agris, in Fifa, Auguſia, Gourea, & Gareocha, alijſque prouincijs munificè cumulabant) magnæ hodie nobilitatis virtutíſque commendatione in Scotia vigent. Of whoſe line and name at this daie (as is before ſaid) continuing in great honor, the earle of Rothos now liuing called Leſle dwelleth in Fife, and married the daughter of the earle of Gowrie or Gowrike, the ſame earle of Rothos being a perſon no leſſe wiſe and honorable, than deſcended of ancient and honorable anceſtors. But leauing that familie, let vs returne from whenſe we haue digreſſed.

Leſleus lib. 6. pag. 211.

The biſhop of Roſſe being departed from the duke of Vanier (as before you haue heard) in the yeare following, which was the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred three ſcore and ninetæne, Amies Steward the lord of Obignie in France, being of the houſe of the Stewards, and ſonne to John the eldeſt brother of Matthew Leneur, ſometime regent of Scotland, buried at Sterling, as is before touched, did come into Scotland, was by the king moſt honorablie receiued, and aduanced to further honor. For the king taking from Robert Steward (whom the laſt yeare he had created earle of Leneur) the title of that earledome of Leneur, he now inueſted this lord of Obignie with the ſame, and created him earle of Leneur, thereby more firmelie to bind the lord of Obignie in France to be faithfull vnto him in Scotland. And leaſt he ſhould ſéeme by taking the earledome from Robert Steward to haue wronged him, the king for recompenſe therof, beſtoweth vpon the ſaid Robert Steward as honorable a title and earldome as the ſame was, for he inueſted the ſame Robert with the earledome of March. Not long after which the king erecting the ſame earledome of Leneur vnto a dukedome, he did beſtow that honor of duke vpon the ſaid lord of Obignie, & created him duke of Leneur, which title at this daie, his ſonne being a towardlie yong gentleman doth moſt honorablie poſſeſſe, he being the onlie perſon in that countrie which doth in this our age inioie that title of duke, being ſuch an honor as was but latelie begun amongſt them, and neuer verie plentifull in that region: for the ſame hath not yet as I for this preſent ſuppoſe noriſhed at anie one time (when that title was riſeſt amongſt them) three perſons adorned with that ſtile. Now touching the matter of their firſt creation and continuance, I thinke it not vnfit to ſaie ſomwhat in this place.

The lord of Obignie made earle of Leneur.

Robert Steward made erle of March.

The firſt creation of dukes in that countrie was vſed by Robert the third of that name, whoſe right name being John, was after turned vnto Robert, for doubt of euill ſucceſſe to grow to the kingdome by a gouernor ſo called. For thus write the Scots as Leſleus hath deliuered with theſe ſpæches: Verùm quum ipſi nobiles arbitrarẽtur nomini ineſſe neſcio quid ominis infauſti, quòd reges Franciæ & Angliæ, hoc nomine conſignati, bello prehenderẽtur, mutato nomine Robertum vt patrem eum appellari decreuerũt. Quæ illorum ſiue in nominis obſeruatione ſuperſtitio, ſiue in regis conſeruatione diligentia, maioris mali regi iam impendentis augurium quoddam mihi videtur. Nam non multo poſt ex equo illi decidenti, omnia membra ita contuſa fuerunt, vt (quòd regnandi moleſtias ac labores nullo modo poterat pati) Roberti comiti Fifenſi fratri ſuo regni gubernationẽ dedere cogeretur. Which John as before is ſaid, hauing now obteined a new name, was the firſt which brought a new title of honor into his kingdome: for he created Dauid his eldeſt ſonne duke of Rothſeie, and his brother Robert (whom he had made protector of the kingdome) duke of Albanie, as is ſet downe by the ſame Leſleus in theſe words;

The firſt creation of dukes in Scotland.

Leſleus lib. 7. pag. 264.

To which king John of England and France, he might alſo haue added one of his own countrie of Scotland John Baliol the king, who was as infortunate in his gouernment as anie of the other.

Leſleus lib.7. pag.263.

words: Tertio plus minus anno (which was about the yeate of our redemption one thouſand three hundred foure ſcore and thirteene) concilio ex omni ordinum genere Perthi habito, poſt alias res pro regni cõmodo ſapienter actas, rex Dauidem filium ſuum titulo ducis Rothſaiæ, & Robertum fratrem ſuum quem regno adminiſtrando præfecerat, ducis Albanij honore ornabat: qui duo primi fuerunt in Scotia his titulis illuſtrati. Thus much he, proouing that it is not aboue one hundred foure ſcore and thirteene yeares ſince that title came firſt into Scotland. Wherby it appereth that England ſince the conqueſt hauing dukes erected by king Edward the third, who in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand three hundred thirtie & ſeuen, made his eldeſt ſonne duke of Cornwall, hath had dukes about two hundred fortie & nine yeres paſt, being fiftie and ſix yere before they had anie in Scotland. And as thoſe two before named were the firſt which were inueſted with the honor of duke in Scotland, ſo after the death of the ſame king which fell in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred and ſix, in the Interregnum or vacancie of the kingdome (which continued eightéene yeares from the ſaid yere of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred and ſix, vntill the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred twentie and foure) in which James the firſt hauing béene trained vp in England obteined the crowne, and vnder the protectorſhip of Murdacke (the ſonne of the foreſaid Robert the firſt duke of Albanie) to whom the gouernment of the realme of Scotland was committed after the death of the ſaid Robert the third.

Leſleus lib.7. pag.268.

Archibald Dowglaſſe was the firſt Scot which paſſing the ſeas, & ſeruing a ſtrange prince, inioied anie ſuch title of duke in anie forrein nation. For the Scots going then to aid the French againſt the Engliſh, the French king to honour the Scots and to bind them to be more faithfull vnto him, created John Steward earle of Buquaine conſtable of France, & aduanced the ſaid Archibald Dowglaſſe to the honor of the dukedome of Turone: but he did not long inioie that great title, being ſhortlie after ſlaine at the battell of Vernoſle, in the yere of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred twentie and foure. In treting of which battell Bucchanan, whoſe name may rightlie be deduced from Bucca vana, beyond all modeſtie and courſe of reaſon forgetting his calling, his learning and humanitie, hath ſpued out all his malice againſt the Engliſh nation, whereof I haue treated in my former additions to the hiſtorie of Scotland. Thus hauing ſomewhat digreſſed from the matter of later yeares, wherewith I ought to haue furniſhed my imperfect continuances of the annals of Scotland, I will returne to the lord of Obegnie, who was at this time created duke of Leneur, and who occaſioned me to make this diſcourſe. Wherefore I will here ſet downe what Leſleus hath written of the firſt originall of that houſe in France, and of this duke of Leneur thus by the king newlie as before ſaid created, the words of which Leſleus bithop of Roſſe be theſe: Nouam quoque Scotorum equitum turmam Carolus 6 (king of France, which had the warres againſt the king of England, when the Scots were thus aduanced in the dominions of France, being meane betwéene the ſaid yeares of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred and ſix, and one thouſand foure hundred twentie and foure) paulo ante conſcripſit, quæ vulgò Scotorum armatorum cohors dicebatur. Huius primus dux Robertus Stuartus ex Lenoxij comitis familia ortus, domino de Aubigne multíſque alijs terris, muneribus, honoribus, & baleagijs cõmuni populi ſermone dictis, a rege inſignitus eſt. Quæ omnia a Scotis eiuſdem cognominis & proſapiæ continuata, ſucceſſionis ſerie per Barnardum nimirum celebrem militiæ ducem, deinde per Robertum, denique Iohannem Stuartum comitis Lenoxij fratrem iam diu poſſeſſa, præclaræ nobilitatis ac indolis iuuenis, Iohãnis filius non paruam ſuorum virtutis ſpem de ſe excitans, etiam nunc hodie obtinet. Thus much Leſle. Beſide which that Leſleus hath ſet downe of the firſt lord of Obegnie in France, Paulus Iouius in his booke of Empreſſe written in Italian, hath not forgotten to ſpeake ſomewhat of him, where he ſetteth downe the deuiſe of his enſignes or armes in this ſort tranſlated by me into Engliſh.

There was (ſaith Iouius) amongſt the Frenchmen a man of knowne vertue or prowelle, & moſt famous captaine called *Yeberard Steward) borne of the bloud roiall of Scotland) being honored with the title of monſieur de Obegnie, who being of kinred to James the fourth of that name, did beare for his deuiſe or enſigne, a field ſiluer, a ramping lion gewles, with a number of buckles thereabout; the which cote armour he did weare vpon his vpper garment, and likewiſe beare in his ſtandard, with this poſie, Diſtantia iungit: ſignifieng thereby, that he was the mean or buckle to hold and knit togither the king of Scots and the French king, with a iuſt counterpeiſe againſt the force of the king of England, naturall enimie to Scotland and France. Thus much Iouius, & thus much I of the duke of Leneur lord of Obegnie in France. After which, ſith I am now in diſcourſing of dukes of that countrie, and haue ſhewed when the firſt duke was made in Scotland, and who they were; I thinke it not vnfit for this place, to ſet downe a catalog of all ſuch dukes of Scotland as haue come vnto my knowlege by ſearch of hiſtories, ſince the creation of the ſame firſt dukes, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred and eightéene; which I will not refuſe to do in this place, following the ſame courſe which I haue obſerued before in the hiſtorie of England, where I haue ſet downe all the dukes, ſince the firſt creation of anie duke in that countrie. Wherefore thus I enter into my dukes of Scotland.

*Barnard.

A catalog of all the dukes of Scotland by creation or deſcent.

David Steward duke of Rothſeie.

DAuid Steward (eldeſt ſon of John Steward earle of Carricke, after called Robert the third, and leauing the name of John when he came to the crowne of Scotland) was (by parlement, about the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand three hundred foure ſcore and eightéene, being the eight yeare of Robert the third) made duke of Rothſeie, when he was about eightéene yeares of age, or rather twentie, as by all accounts it muſt be, if that be true that he was borne the two and twentith date of October one thouſand three hundred three ſcore and eightéene, made duke in the yeare one thouſand three hundred foure ſcore & eightéene, as ſome haue. But Leſleus (as before) referreth this as I by all circumſtances do gather, to the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand three hundred foure ſcore & thirteene. He maried Margerie the daughter of Archibald earle Dowglas, about the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred, being the tenth of Robert the ſecond.

Robert Steward duke of Albanie.

Robert Steward ſecond ſon to Robert the ſecond king of Scots, by Eliſabeth Mure or More his wife, being by his father created earle of Fife and Menteth, was in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand three hundred foureſcore and eightéene, and the eight yeare of the gouernement of Robert the ſecond, aduanced uanced to the title and honor of the dukedome of Albanie: this Robert and the other Dauid as I haue before noted, being the firſt dukes that euer were in Scotland. This man being gouernor of Scotland in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred and one, falling in the yeare of the reigne of Robert the third, did apprehend Dauid the duke of Rothſeie, and committed him to ſtreict priſonment in Faukeland, where in the end he died by extreame famine, whoſe want of food was ſuch, that he was faine to gnaw his owne fingers: of this Robert is more ſpoken in my protectors of Scotland.

Murdacke duke of Albanie.

Murdacke called duke, was alſo earle of Fife, eldeſt ſonne to this Robert duke of Albanie, was as is moſt likelie duke of Albanie after his father, who being gouernor of Scotland, occaſioned me to intreat more of him in that place.

Alexander duke of Albanie.

Alexander Steward the ſecond ſonne of James the ſecond, was by his father aduanced to the dukedome of Albanie, who being verie yong at the time of his fathers death, which happened in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred ſixtéeſcore, was with his brother John earle of Mar, committed to the cuſtodie of Marie their mother. After which in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred thrée ſcore and thrée, being the third yeare of James the third, he was taken on the ſea by the Engliſhmen in the moneth of June, as he returned from his grandfather the duke of Guelderland, but was after reſtored home by the meanes of James Kennedie biſhop of ſaint Andrews. About ſixtéene yeares following, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred threeſcore and ninetéene, falling in the ſixtéenth yeare of James the third, this duke was committed priſoner to the caſtell of Edenburgh, out of which he brake and eſcaped to Dunbar, from whenſe being well furniſhed, he ſailed into France where he was honorablie receiued, and there maried the daughter and heire of the earle of Bononie, who ſhortlie after dieng, and the duke perceiuing himſelfe not to be ſo well vſed as he was before, came into England & was by king Edward the fourth louinglie accepted; who granted aid to this duke. Whereupon he in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred foureſcore and two, did enter Scotland with a great power & ſpoiled the countrie, comming (without anie reſiſtance in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred foureſcore and two, being the two and twentith yeare of James the third) as far as Radſtrag, or Raſkalrig, where he pitched his campe: which being knowne, he was by mediation of the nobilitie admitted home to his countrie, being further preferred to the earldomes of March and Mar, and proclamed generall lieutenant of the king; by meanes whereof, he gouerned the whole realme, the king being now in priſon. After which, this duke ſetteth the king at libertie through the perſuaſions of the queene, without knowlege thereof giuen to the other of the nobilitie: whereby new turmoiles did ariſe amongſt the people. Then in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred foureſcore and two, and the three and twentith yeare of James the third; this duke hauing intelligence that there was poiſon prepared to be giuen to him in drinke in the kings chamber, whereby he ſtood in feare of his life, did forſake the court and fled to Dunbar: at what time alſo the king for his owne ſafetie, got him vnto the caſtell of Edenburgh: whereupon the earle of Angus and Buccluaine forſaking the king, toke part with the duke.

Leſle.lib.8. pag.319.

After which the duke being ſummoned as ſome haue (or being beſieged in the caſtle of Dunbar as other haue) fled into England. But Leſleus ſaith that he toke a little bote and ſo eſcaped into France, where he was honorablie interteined by Charles king of that realme; and where the Frenchmen for his ſingularitie in feats of armes, termed him the father of chiualrie; thus writeth Leſleus. But others (deliuering this matter in other forme) ſaie that after his flight from Dunbar, he paſſed into England, gathered power, returned into Scotland, did inuade the kingdome, & was put to flight: whereupon growing in diſgrace with the king of England, he then fled into France. And then after, the ſame Leſleus ſaith: Pariſijs dum ſingulare certamen Aurelianenſis dux cum aliquo equite iniuit aſtans, particula cuiuſdam haſtæ traijcitur, breuíque poſt moritur, about the yere of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred eightie three. He left two ſonnes behind him, John duke of Albanie gouernor of Scotland during the minoritie of James the fourth, and one other Alexander, whom he had by his firſt wife in Scotland the daughter of the earle of Orchadie, which Alexander was after biſhop of Murrete, and abbat of Scone.

John duke of Albanie.

John Steward duke of Albanie, ſonne to the foreſaid Alexander duke of Albanie, did after the death of his father obteine that dukedome, in the yeare of Chriſt one theuſand foure hundred eightie three: of this man I haue made a more large diſcourſe in the gouernors of Scotland, whereunto I refer thée; and therefore omit to talke anie further of him in this place.

James Steward duke of Rotheſeie.

James Steward (eldeſt ſonne to James the third) being duke of Rotheſeie, is by ſome termed prince of Rotheſeie, was borne in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred ſeuentie and two on the tenth date of March, being about the twelfe yeare of the reigne of his father James the third. This duke in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred eightie and eight, in the nine and twentith yeare of his father, and the ſixtéenth of his age, was by the nobilitie rebelling againſt his father made capteine or leader of thoſe rebels, who at that time at Banocksburne two miles from Sterling, incountring with the king his father, did there ſlea him; whereupon this James duke of Rotheſeie was preſentlie made king by the name of James the fourth.

Alexander duke of Rotheſeie.

Alexander Steward the ſecond, ſonne to James the third, king of Scotland, and brother to James the fourth, was duke of Rotheſeie: for thus writeth Leſleus li.8.pag.331. In ſtudium incubuit rex (which was James the fourth then king, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred eightie and nine) ſedulò, vt Alexander dux Rothoſeiæ & Iohannes comes Marriæ ſui fratres tenelli adhuc liberali educatione diligentiſſimè imbuerentur, tantóque ſumptu pro ratione patrimonij, quod ſingulis pater reliquerat ſatis amplum, magnificè alerentur. He died the ſixtéenth kalends of Januarie, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred and ſixtéene at Sterling.

Henrie duke of Albanie.

Henrie Steward lord Derneleie the eldeſt ſonne to Matthew Steward erle of Leneur, was brought vp in England, a goodlie and beautifull perſonage, being to be married to Marie the queene of Scots, was after his comming into Scotland made earle of Roſſe, in the yere of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred threeſcore and fiue by the ſame queene, about the three and twentith yeare of hir reigne: ſhortlie after which he was in the Julie following created duke of Albanie; and on ſaturdaie the eight and twentith day of the ſame moneth before the marriage, proclamed king by the queenes commandement, at the market croſſe of Edenborough, being married to the ſame Marie on the nine and twentith daie of the ſame moneth, in the chapell at Holie rood houſe, at fiue of the clocke in the morning: which honor he did not long inioie.

inioie. For in the tenth of Februarie, in the yeare of Christ one thousand fiue hundred threescore and six (what by the malice of some of the nobilitie, and false persuasion of others, he was led to enter into those actions, which in the end were his owne ouerthrow, and that by such as moued him thereunto) he was miserablie slaine in a house within the towne, nere to Kirke a field.

Amies Steward duke of Leneux.

Amies Steward lord of Obigneie in France, sonne to John Steward brother to Matthew Steward earle of Leneux, being first by James the first of that name made earle of Leneux, was after by the same king made duke of Leneux; who being dead, hath left a yong sonne behind him, a gentleman of great hope, at this date liuing, inioieng the title of his father, and called duke of Leneux. Thus hauing set downe all the dukes which haue béene in Scotland, we wil descend to such Scots as haue inioied that title in a forren nation.

Lodowike Steward duke of Leneux.

That diuers of the Scots haue obteined the title and honor of dukes in forren countries.

As it is honorable to anie man to be aduanced vnto anie title of honour in his owne countrie, either for desert or fauor; whereof yet partialitie maie most commonlie be the furtherer: so is it far more honorable and remoued from all suspicion of vndeserued fauor, to be inuested with anie title of dignitie for anie cause in a forren countrie; because princes (whose hands are mostlie opened to inrich their subiects, in whose faithfull hearts their safetie is principallie inclosed) do not commonlie without singular desert aduance strangers to them by birth in an other nation, & not their native subiects, for that they are people, to whom without an especiall triall anie prince is not to commit anie portion of his kingdome, and much lesse anie part of his person. Wherefore the same being an argument of worthie desert, either for assured fidelitie to the person of such prince, or for the valour of seruice of the aduanced, when anie one is adorned with anie such title of honor, I thinke it not vnfit in this place to obscure the glorie of the Scots (who might impute the same to be maliciouslie done by me) and to omit such of their nation as haue inioied the title of dukes in a forren countrie, especiallie being now in hand with all the dukes of Scotland.

And although the number of such dukes be small, as not exceeding the figure of foure, and therefore in some mens minds might well enough be passed ouer in silence: yet carrieng a contrarie mind, in that I would not anie waie pretermit what they iustlie deserue, I will faithfullie set downe what I find recorded touching the same after this maner.

Archibald Dowglasse duke of Tourraine.

Archibald Dowglasse was created duke of Touraine in France in this sort. In the yeare of Christ one thousand foure hundred twentie and three as some saie, or one thousand foure hundred and six as other haue (whereof I maie not determine anie thing by reason I cannot reconcile these defaults of numbers which haue happened through the contrarietie of bookes) Charles the seuenth of that name king of France, sending ambassadors into Scotland, to renew the old league betweene the two nations of France and Scotland, and to craue aid against the English, there were ambassadors and other noble men sent likewise into France out of Scotland; with whose comming the French king being greatlie comforted, and hoping of good successe against the English by reason of the Scottish aid, he did vpon the comming of the Scots to the court creat this Archibald Dowglasse (then erle of Wighton) duke of Touraine. But that honor continued not long with him, for in the yeare of Christ one thousand foure hundred twentie and foure, at the battell of Vernoile in Perth the English obteined the victorie, and this new duke with his sonne and heire James Dowglasse earle of Wighton was amongst others most vnfortunatlie slaine.

Archibald Dowglasse duke of Touraine.

Archibald earle Dowglasse was duke of Touraine, as I gather by the words of Lesleus touching this Archibalds sonne, of whom we will speake hereafter, and then set downe the same words of Lesleus to proue Archibald duke of Touraine, who married the earle of Crawfords daughter, by whom he had issue William earle Dowglasse, a child of foureteene yeares old which succéeded him, & one Dauid Dowglasse. After which this Archibald died at Lesselrig in the yeare of Christ one thousand foure hundred thirtie and nine, being about the third yeare of king James the first.

William earle Dowglasse a child of foureteene yeares of age succéeded his father in his inheritances, and was after made duke of Touraine or Tourone, who being now earle Dowglasse, deliuered forth such buds of vertue, as he lent great hope to all men of his worthinesse and good successe, to his further honor and his countries benefit. But in the end their expectations were deceiued after that he was made duke of Touraine: for being puft vp in pride with those great honors, he forgot himselfe, and wrought his owne and his countries harme, whereof we will not now speake; but onelie set downe Lesleus words touching his admittance to the dukedome of Touraine. Gulielmus (which was this earle Dowglasse) Malcolmum Flemingum dominum Cummirnald & Alanū Lowder ad Carolum septimū Francorum regem misit, oratū, vt ducatu Toronensi eius patrimonia & dignitates amplificarentur: æquum enim esse contendit, vt quo ducatu Archibaldus Dowglasius (qui pro libertate Franciæ bello Vernolensi mortem oppetiuit) fruebatur * & pater illius nuper mortuus potiebatur, idem ad se quoque perueniret. Carolus non inuitus concessit, quo dono quantum illi ad honorem dignitatémque cumuli, tantum profectò ad superbiam, insolentiámque materiæ accessit. Thus much Lesle, placing the same to be done as other authors also do, in the yeare of Christ one thousand foure hundred thirtie and nine, being about the third yeare of the reigne of James the first of that name king of Scotland. Which honor he did not long inioie, for in the yeare following being the yeare of Christ one thousand foure hundred and fortie, and the fourth yeare of the same king James; he was, for that he would neither obeie the gouernment of the gouernor or chancellor, bidden to a banket at Edenburgh castle, whereas when he and his brother Dauid were set at dinner, the meat was suddenlie remoued, and a buls head presented to the erle of Dowglasse, being in those daies a token that he should shortlie be executed. Immediatlie whereupon, the said earle with his brother Dauid, & Malcolme Fleming lord of Cummirnald were beheaded before the castle gate: so that this great honor séemed to those Scots which possessed the same, not much vnlike to the Setane horse, or to the honor of the dukedome of Glocester.

Lesleus. Lib. 8. pag. 292.

This proueth Archibald Dowglasse father to this William to be duke of Touraine.

James earle of Arrane being made gouernor to Marie quéene of Scots, in the yeare of Christ one thousand foure hundred fortie and two (in which being about seuen daies old, she began the first yeare of hir vnfortunate gouernement, which I maie so rightlie terme, because she was after deposed in the yeare of Christ one thousand fiue hundred threescore and seuen, in the fiue and twentith yeare of hir reigne) was made made duke of Chatelerault by the French king in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and foure, being the twelfe yeare of the reigne of the ſame quæne Marie, of whom I haue intreated more liberallie in my diſcourſe of the protectors of of Scotland, and therefore meane not to ſpeake anie thing of that here: wherfore leauing theſe dukes, we will returne our pen to other matters done in Scotland.

This yeare there was a practiſe by forren perſons of great ſtate in Europe, to make ſome inuaſion, or at the leaſt ſome diſturbance vpon or amongſt ſuch realmes as profeſſed the goſpell, and were enimies to the Romane religion, by meanes whereof as it was ſuppoſed, manie princes inclining their heads to the popes obedience, embracing his doctrine and reſting at his diſpoſition, expected the performance of ſome actions then to be done by them in the territories of the aduerſe part, and in the realmes of ſuch princes, as not onelie oppoſed themſelues againſt the popes doctrine, but had alſo drawne their necks from the yoke of his ſubiection, in matters both of ciuill gouernement and of religion. Amongſt which princes, being commonlie termed catholiks, the duke of Guiſe a perſon of great account in France, tied nærelie in bloud to the impriſoned quæne, and to the yoong king of Scots, and ſupported with other princes purſſes, purpoſed to haue ſet full foot in Scotland, and to haue obteined the whole diſpoſition and rule of that king and kingdome. But God, in whoſe hands reſteth the ordering of princes harts, not permitting ſuch determinations to ſort to the purpoſed effect, did for that time fruſtrate the execution thereof.

For whereas the duke of Guiſe ſhould with martiall power haue inuaded, entered and poſſeſſed Scotland, there aroſe troubles and turmoiles of warres in his owne countrie of France, about the parts of Picardie and Dalphinæ, which called him from the diſpatch of that his former deuiſe, for the ſtaieng to appeaſe the ſame new inſurrection, employeng all his gathered forces thereunto, and encountring with thoſe perſons: the rigor of the ſame warres ſo weakened his ſtrength, that he was not able (without ſome new ſupplie of men and monie, which could not be had vpon the ſudden) to produce his former intent to anie effect. But yet, leaſt that the ſame intention might not ſeeme altogither to haue quailed, or that he ſhould be noted to haue made ſhew to enterprize a thing which he neither could nor would proſecute to the vttermoſt; there was ſomewhat by his meanes and furtherance attempted in Scotland, which yet in the end fell not forth in all reſpects to anſwer the erected hope of good ſucceſſe therin. For partlie by the policie of the Scots, and partlie by the ſupport of the alies and friends to the king, but altogither by the vnited ſtrength of both ſorts, the Scots rid themſelues of the ſame deuiſe, and ſince remained ſafe from the danger of the Guiſe and of his partakers.

After this the earle of Morton, ſometime regent of Scotland, being condemned to die, and readie to ſuffer that execution which was appointed vnto him, ſome perſons had conference with him about matters of great importance; on the ſame date wherein he was to ſuffer, which perſons ſo conferring with him, were John Durie, and maſter Walter Bancanquell. In which diſcourſe betwéne the earle and them theſe matters in ſubſtance amongſt manie others fell forth, in queſtions propounded by them, and in anſwers made by him in this ſort almoſt word for word, drawne into ſome ſeuerall heads and articles, as they were deliuered vnto me.

The examinations and anſwers of the earle of Morton before his death, but after his condemnation.

Firſt he was exhorted by them that he ſhould not be diſcouraged by his ouerthrow, in conſidering the eſtate whervnto he had bæne once called in this world, but rather remembring the glorie to come, he ſhould reioiſe and be of good comfort. Whereunto he anſwered, that as concerning all the glorie which he had in this world, he reſpected it not, becauſe he was perſuaded that all worldlie honor is but vanitie, and the broken rëed of Egypt. And as concerning the eſtate whereunto he was brought, he thanked God for it, and was at that point, that he was rather content to render his life than to liue, becauſe he knew, that as God had appointed the time for his death, ſo had he alſo appointed the manner thereof, ſæing that now was the time, and this was the manner which beſt pleaſed his God to take him in, and therefore was content. And as for his life in this world, he cared not for it, in reſpect of that immortalitie, & the euerlaſting ioy which he looked for, and whereof he was aſſured.

Secondlie, being required what was his part or knowledge in the kings * death or murther: he anſwered with this atteſtation, that as he ſhould anſwer to his Lord God, ſo he would declare all his knowledge therein: the ſum whereof was, that after his returne out of England, whither he was baniſhed for * Dauids ſlaughter, he came out of Whetherbone to Whethingham, where the erle Bothwell was at the ſame time, with whome there was communication about the kings murther, but he would not conſent therto. After which, opening a large diſcourſe thereof, laieng the cauſe, the contriuing, and the execution of the ſame in great perſons now liuing, and confeſſing that they vnderſtood thereof, and durſt not for manie cauſes reueale the ſame, neither to the king nor the kings father the earle of Lenox; he added, how that in the end he was by the law now of late conuicted of knowledge and concealing the kings murther, when as he ſhould anſwer to God he had no part or knowledge in that matter. Furthermore, ſhewing that after the earle of Bothwell was clëered of that murther by aſſiſe, that he and ſundrie of the nobilitie ſubſcribed a bond with the earle of Bothwell, that if anie ſhould laie the kings murther to his charge, he would aſſiſt him to the contrarie, and that therefore he ſubſcribed to the quænes mariage with the earle Bothwell as ſundrie other of the nobilitie did, being charged thereunto by the quænes owne writting and commandement.

* which was Henrie king of Scots, ſlaine in the yeare of Chriſt 1566, beginning the yeare at the annuntiation of the virgin. Dauid Richio the Italian, ſecretarie to the quæne, ſlaine in the yeare 1566.

Then being required in the name of the liuing God, that ſæing this murther of the king was one of the moſt filthieſt acts that euer was done in Scotland, and that the ſecrets thereof hath not hitherto bæne opened, neither who was the chæfe doer therein, or whether the king was then ſtrangled or blowne vp into the aire; that he ſhould declare if he knew anie further ſecret therein: he anſwered, that as he ſhould make anſwer to God, he knew no more ſecrets in that matter than he had alreadie declared and heard, by the depoſitions of ſuch as had alreadie ſuffered for it, which depoſitions are yet extant. Againe, being demanded if he knew anie preſentlie about the king, which were doers of that worke, by whoſe companie the king and commonwealth might be hurt: he anſwered that he knew none, neither would he accuſe anie, &c.

Thirdlie, being examined of the poiſoning of the earle of Athioults, if he had anie act or part therein:

he anſwered with good atteſtation, ſaieng; Let God neuer be mercifull vnto me, if euer I knew anie thing of that matter, or heard of it before it came to my eares by the common brute of the countrie. And being further demanded if he knew that maiſter Iohn Prouandt brought him anie poiſon; he replied that he knew no ſuch thing, and that he knew nothing by maiſter Prouandt but honeſtie, to which he more added theſe ſpæches; Fie, fie, there is ouermuch filthineſſe in Scotland alreadie, God forbid that vile practiſing of poiſoning ſhould enter among vs: I would not for all the earledome of Athuile, haue neither miniſtred poiſon to him, or cauſed it to haue bëne miniſtred, yea if there had bën one hundred on my part, and but he alone, I would not haue ſtirred one heare of his head.

Fourthlie, being demanded if he made anie conſpiracie againſt the earle of Leneux: he anſwered with like atteſtation as before, that he neuer thought in his heart, or once purpoſed anie conſpiracie againſt the earle of Leneux, neither minded to him anie hurt in bodie or otherwiſe. But it grœued him that the earle of Leneux knew not the eſtate of their countrie, nor yet perceiued the danger of the kings perſon. For being thereunto requeſted by others, ſundrie were brought home who were the kings enimies, ouerthrowers of the kingdome, and enimies to religion; whereby there was aparant danger to his perſon and the relme: all which he hoped to haue helped by counſell, when the earle of Leneux familiaritie and his ſhould haue bëne greater.

Fiftlie, being demanded whether he had anie league or dealing with England for the conueieng of the king or otherwiſe, or if he had anie penſion of the quëne of England for that purpoſe, he anſwered in theſe words: As I ſhall anſwer to God vnder paine of condemnation or ſaluation, I neuer had anie dealings with England that waie: there was neuer one in Scotland or England, neither the quëne nor anie in hir name, that euer moued anie ſuch thing to me, ſo indirectlie as to conueie the king into England; it neuer entred into my hart, I would not for all the realme of England haue put him into England, except that it had bëne for his profit and honor, &c. And for the more clëre purgation of my ſelfe in this matter I will ſaie, if euer I meant but directlie his wealth, let God neuer be mercifull vnto me; and I ſhall neuer aſke God mercie for anie thing that entred in my hart againſt the king: yea there was nothing more that I regarded in this life, than that he ſhould be brought vp in vertue and godlineſſe. And I will ſaie more. If I had bëne as carefull to ſerue God & walke in his feare, as I was to ſëke the kings wealth, I had not bëne brought to the point I am at this daie. And where they allege I was the quëne of Englands penſionarie, as I ſhall anſwer to God, I had neuer penſion of the quëne of England in all my life. And although they cauſed the brute to go, that I ſhould haue furniſhed the quëne of Englands ſouldors now laſt vpon the borders, I neuer knew of it. And laſt of all, where they allege that I ſhould haue bene a great dealer with England, I praiſe God I neuer had dealing with them, but for the weale publike of the king, his countrie, and ſubiects, &c.

Sixtlie, being demanded what was his part of the enterpriſe of the caſtell of Sterling, he anſwered, that he knew nothing of it till it was done; but being in Lochleuen, he receiued aduertiſement out of the caſtell of Sterling, and a writting from the king, that he ſhould come thither. And whereas they ſaid, that he minded to këepe the king in captiuitie there, the truth was, that he neuer meant to këepe him in captiuitie there or in anie other place. But he vnderſtood by the kings owne ſpeaking, that he was as frëe at that time as euer he was before, or deſired to be, for the preſent. And if he had knowen that his grace would haue gone to anie other place, where greater libertie had bin, he would gladlie haue gone with him.

Seuenthlie, being laid to his charge, that he was a great hinderance of the matters and authoritie of the biſhops, &c: when he might haue done much good for the furtherance of Gods glorie & aduancement of his goſpell, both in the time of his gouernement, and ſince: his anſwer was, that concerning the religion and doctrine as then it was preached and profeſſed in Scotland, he alwaies meant well in his hart to it, and acknowledged it to be the verie truth of God; inſomuch that rather than anie hurt ſhould haue come vnto the religion, he would haue ſpent his life and goods in the defenſe, like as now he was contented to die in the conſtant profeſſion thereof. But indëed as concerning ſome things in policie of the church, as the ſtate of the biſhops, and ſuch like, which were in queſtion betwëne him and the church, he did therein according to his knowledge, and follow the opinion which he thought to be beſt at that time, in conſideration of the eſtate of all things as they were. Howbeit he would not ſtand in defenſe of thoſe things which he then did, but yet he would make this proteſtation, that as he ſhould anſwer to God, he did nothing in thoſe matters either of contempt, malice, or enuie; but if there were anie things done amiſſe, it was of ignorance, and for lacke of better knowledge; and if he had knowen better, he would haue done otherwiſe, being now purpoſed at the laſt to haue holpen them ſo farre as he might.

Eightlie, he was deſired in the name of God, not to ſtand in his owne innocencie, but plainelie to confeſſe his ſinnes to Gods glorie, and to thinke, that howſoeuer it be that men haue done in this life, yet God had alwaies before him whereof he might be worthie of this and more: whereunto he yëlded this ſpeech; Howſoeuer it be that men haue done, I commit them to God and their owne conſciences. But I acknowledge indëed, that God hath alwaies done iuſtlie to me, and not onlie iuſtlie but mercifullie alſo, becauſe amongſt all the other ſinners I confeſſe my ſelfe to be one of the greateſt and filthieſt abuſers of my bodie in the pleaſures of the fleſh; and alſo to haue giuen my ſelfe ſo ouermuch to the world, to the pleaſures thereof, and to other ſinnes, that God might iuſtlie laie it to my charge, in that I exerciſed not the fruits of my profeſſion in my life and conuerſation as I ought to haue done, for which I beſeech God to be mercifull vnto me. And indëed now I acknowledge the great mercie of God in this, that amongſt all the benefits which he hath beſtowed vpon me, one of the chiefeſt is, that he hath in this my laſt trouble giuen me ſpace and leaſure to repent me of my ſinnes, and to be at a point with God. In which trouble alſo I haue found farre greater comfort than euer I could find before, becauſe I haue thereby concluded thus with my ſelfe, that if God ſhould haue ſpared my life, and deliuered me out of this trouble, I ſhould then haue caſt awaie all the cares of the world, the pleaſures of the fleſh, the delights of earthlie things, and declared my ſelfe to ſerue my God in all kind of quietneſſe and ſimplicitie. And if it ſhall pleaſe God to take me in this trouble, I am concluded alſo to be content therewith, being alwaies aſſured of the mercies of God. And for that cauſe I do now thanke God that I find my ſelfe at this point, that I am rather content to die than to liue, and that I ſhall not ſëe the miſeries to come: for I will aſſure you that I think this to be the moſt acceptable time that euer God could haue taken me in, becauſe I perceiue and ſée ſuch miſeries and confuſions to inſue, that I thanke God that I ſhall not ſée them. And you who do feare God, and liue after me, when you ſhall ſée theſe things, you will wiſh to be where I ſhall be, that is, with him.

Ninethlie, being demanded what he thought of the forme of iudgement vſed againſt him, what his opinion therof was, whether he thought anie wrong done vnto him or no, &c: he anſwered, I would be verie loth to find fault or blame the noble men which haue taken themſelues vpon their conſciences to condemne me, but I will remit them to God and their owne conſciences; yet I am moued to ſpeake somewhat frælie in this matter which is this. I ſaw ſuch partiall dealing againſt me, that it hath bæne all one to me, if I had bæne as innocent as ſaint Stephan, or that I had bæne as giltie as Iudas was: for I perceiued there was nothing ſought but my life, howſoeuer things had bæne, which appeareth in this, that no exception of anie perſon which was to paſſe vpon my aſſiſe could be admitted: for I required the earle of Argile to purge himſelfe of partiall counſell giuen to the purſuer my accuſer; he purged himſelfe indeed, but I knew the contrarie, that he gaue partiall counſell to him. Likewiſe the lord of Wanthon, the lord of Seiton, and ſuch others, who were knowen to be my enimies, (notwithſtanding lawfull exception) were put vpon my queſt. In conſideration wherof I can not but be perſuaded of one thing, which it behoueth me to communicat vnto you, and it is thus. I perceiue it is not my life that they ſéeke onelie, but they who are authors of my death haue ſome other purpoſe in hand, which they perceiue will not be done, except I and ſuch other which do fauor the good cauſe, were taken out of the waie. Wherefore I can not but ſuſpect that I haue bæne ſo handled, and that ſuch as hereafter ſhall be put therevnto, may haue a more plaine waie to do their turne or intent: and I praie God that they which are to liue behind me ſée not the practiſe thereof, but I feare it ſore. And therefore in reſpect of this apparant danger of the common cauſe, I will giue my counſell to the king my maſter, and wiſh you in the name of God to beare it to him, the ſumme whereof is this. I perceiue that they which haue bæne the kings foes and enimies, are brought into credit & court, and they who haue bæne the maintainers of his crowne & good friends, are diſcredited and miſliked of. And likewiſe ſuch as are knowen to be papiſts, and ſuſpected to be enimies to the religion, are ouer familiar and great in credit with his maieſtie, which ſurelie can not be without great danger to the religion, and hurt to his eſtat. For which cauſe I admoniſh him in the name of God to beware of them, and to ſéeke a remedie thereof. And as he hath bene brought vp in the feare of God, and companie of good men, ſo to continue therein, and not to go backe, or elſe he hath done with it for euer. For I tell you what moueth me to ſpeake thus, which is, that the ſtate of religion in this countrie appeared neuer to be in ſuch danger, and that for this cauſe. I here laie there is a dealing put in practiſe betwéene France and England, and Monſieurs marriage with the quéene is like to be feared; if France and England bind togither, and that marriage go forward, you may eaſilie vnderſtand, that the one of them will perſuade the other to their religion, &c.

Tenthlie, being required to giue his counſell to the earle of Angus, and to ſhew him what was mæteſt to be done, ſeeing preſentlie he was in great trouble, he anſwered: I dare giue him no counſell, and I will tell you whie; to bid him come in, partlie I dare not, all men may ſée in what danger he is although he now come in: and to counſell him to abide forth I dare not, for then he ſhall loſe the kings fauour for euer, himſelfe and his heritage, friends and all; and therefore the beſt counſell that I can giue him in this matter is, that he make all meanes poſſible to purchaſe the kings fauor againe, and to ſée if he may haue anie aſſurance of his life, and that he may ſerue his God and his king trulie, and ſubmit himſelfe, and all that he hath to his maieſties goodwill: he hath done nothing yet, but it may be amended. I ſaie no more, the Lord giue him his ſpirit to follow that which is beſt.

Eleuenthlie being required to declare what was the ſumme of that admonition, which Iohn Knokes gaue him before he accepted the regiment, when he came vnto him a little before his departure, he anſwered: I ſhall tell you as far as I can remember. Firſt, he aſked of me if I knew anie thing of the kings murder, I anſwered in deed I knew nothing of it. Then he ſaid vnto me, Well God hath beautified you with manie benefits which he hath not giuen to euerie man, for he hath giuen to you riches, wiſedome and friends, and now he is to prefer you to the gouernement of this realme: and therefore in the name of God I charge you, to vſe theſe benefits aright, and better in time to come than you haue done in times paſt; firſt to Gods glorie, to the furtherance of the goſpell, to the maintenance of the church of God & of his miniſters, next for the weale of the king, his realme and true ſubiects: which if you ſhall not do, God ſhall ſpoile you of theſe benefits, and your end ſhall be ignominie & ſhame. Then being inquired if he ſaid true or no, he anſwered: I haue found it true, and yet I doubt not but the Lord will be merciſull vnto me.

Twelfelie, being demanded for what cauſe he held ſome of the neighbours of Edenburgh in ward, he anſwered: Surelie I meant no euill to thoſe men, but it was done in this reſpect: we had the matter of Bulzoine then in hand, and I was informed that they were hinderers therof, for which cauſe I thought it beſt at that time to put them in ward for a while vntill the turne had bæne done. And if I did them anie wrong, I craue forgiueneſſe of them as I forgiue all men.

Thirtenthlie, being required to declare if hée knew before hand that he ſhould be accuſed of this matter or no, he anſwered: I was aduertiſed in déed, and might haue eſcaped, but I would not, truſting alwaie vnto mine innocencie, and therefore ſuppoſed that they would not condemne me vpon ſuch a thing. After this, the ſaid earle with the foreſaid Iohn Durie and Walter Balcanquall did togither call to God by earneſt praier, which being ended the earle ſaid vnto vs (meaning the ſaid Durie and Balcanquall who as I gather were the penners of this matter) I thanke you hartilie for your comfort which you haue offered to me, for now in déed is greateſt néed of comfort, and therefore as you haue begun, I praie you to continue with me: for now that I am come to the knowledge of mine owne ſinnes, there reſteth onlie two things which I craue of you, that is firſt that you will ſhew vnto me ſome kind of argument, whereby I maie be comforted againſt naturall death, becauſe the fleſh is fearefull and weake; whoſe deſire we trauelled to ſatiſfie by long conference, which is too long to reherſe in euerie point, yet the ſumme of that was thus. It was ſaid vnto him that there were three things chéefelie which might make him aſſured of the mercie of God in Chriſt: firſt the innumerable and comfortable promiſes of God conteined in his word, whereunto it behoued him alwaies to leane. Secondlie the example of Gods mercie practised towards his owne seruants, albeit they haue bene great sinners; as appeared in Dauid, Magdalen, Peter, and the theefe, &c. Thirdlie the often experiences of Gods mercies from time to time, which he had found in his owne person, being a light to assure him of his mercie. In the end he answered to this, saieng: I know it to be true, for since I past to Dunbarton I haue read the fiue bookes of Moses, Iosue, the Iudges, and now I am in Samuell, and will tell you what I haue found there. I see that the mercie of God is wonderfull, and alwaies inclined to haue pittie vpon his owne people: for there it appeareth that although he punished them so oft as they sinned, yet as soone as they turned againe to him, he was mercifull vnto them, and when they sinned againe he punished them, and as often as they repented he was mercifull againe, and therefore I am assured, that albeit that I haue offended against my God, yet he will be mercifull vnto me. Also further in this point it was said vnto him, that in case sathan should trauell to discourage him in consideration of the iustice of God on the one part, and of his sinnes on the other part, we exhorted him to the contrarie, to be of good courage, and that in respect of the verie selfe same iustice of God, which will not suffer him twise to take paiment for one thing, as we know in the common dealing of men: for he that is a iust man will not twise demand paiment of that whereof he was alredie paid, for sith Christ died for our sinnes, and paid the vttermost farthing that God could craue, he cannot laie our sinnes vnto our charge being satisfied in Christ, because his iustice will not suffer him twise to take paiment for one thing. Vnto this the earle answered, Truelie it is verie good.

And concerning the naturall feare of death, we exhorted him to be alwaies exercised in the consideration of the glorie, ioie, and felicitie of the life to come, which would be the onlie waie to swallow vp the feare of this naturall death. Wherevnto he answered, I praise God I do so. This being thus done, and he hauing in his hand a prettie treatise of the meditation of death, written by Bradford (which he said that he had gotten from the ladie Dymetton before he went into ward, and for that cause before he came forth of prison againe gaue it to maister Lawson, desiring him to deliuer it to the said ladie againe) he willed maister Walter to read him a peece thereof, which he did, in which reading (hauing sundrie conferences vpon the thing read) both he and we found great comfort, in so much that he said; I protest now that I heare with other eares than I did before. Wherewith being called to breakefast, he earnestlie desired vs to take part with him (as we did) at what time he eat his meat with great cheerefulnesse, as all the companie saw, and as appeared by these his words: I see there is great difference (said he) betweene a man which is troubled with the cares of the world, and him which is free from them, the which I haue found by these two former nights: for before mine accusation, I could not in things find anie rest by reason of cares which I had, because I was to be accused vpon the morrow; and therefore being carefull to answer euerie point that should be laid vnto my charge I could not sleepe: but this night, after that I was condemned, and knew that I should die, I was at a point with my selfe, and had nothing of this world, nor care of this life, but cast my onelie care vpon God, and I praise God I neuer slept better in my life than I did this night. Then he said vnto the steward, Will iam you can beare me record of this; who answered, It is true my lord. Then maister Walter said vnto him, My lord I will drinke to you vpon a condition, vpon this condition my lord, that you and I shall drinke together in the kingdome of heauen, of that immortall drinke which shall neuer suffer vs to thirst againe. Wherevnto the earle answered, Truelie I will pledge you maister Walter on the same condition. After which he said, Iohn Durie, now Iohn I will drinke to you vpon the same condition. This thus ended for that time, and thanks being giuen to God, the earle passed againe to his chamber, at what time maister James Lawson came to him, with whom he considered the substance of all other things againe. After this we departed from him.

Then at afternoone we came to him againe, with sundrie of the brethren of the ministerie, as maister Iames Lawson, maister Robert Poinct, Dauid Fargasone, maister Dauid Hensa, Iohn Brand, maister Iames Garnichiell, and maister Iohn Dauison, whom the earle receiued verie louinglie in his arms, and said to him; Maister Iohn you wrote a little booke indeed, but truelie I meant neuer euill towards you in my mind, forgiue me, and I forgiue you: vpon which words maister Iohn was moued with teares. Then all the brethren being present, the earle reported againe the cheefe substance of all the things whereof before he spake, being demanded thereof point by point, as their testification of this matter subscribed by them at more length will declare. After which the earle was called to his dinner about two of the clocke in the afternoone, who being thus at his dinner, the brethren of the ministerie were informed that there was inuist report made of his profession to the king, & that he should haue confessed much otherwise than he did, whereby the king might haue a worse opinion of him. Wherefore they thought good to send down some before his suffering to informe his maiestie of the truth of his confession: which persons so sent were Dauid Fargasone, Iohn Durie, and Iohn Brand, who before his death did largelie tell the simple truth of his confession (as it was made) vnto the kings maiestie. At their returning the earls keeper required him that he would come forth to the scaffold, wherevnto the earle answered; Sith they haue thus troubled me ouermuch this daie with worldlie things, I supposed that they should haue giuen me one nights leisure to haue aduised my selfe with my God. Then the keeper said, All things are redie now my lord, and I thinke they will not staie. The earle replied, I am redie also I praise God: and so comfortable prater being made, the earle passed downe to the gate, minding to go directlie to the scaffold; but the earle of Arrane staied him, brought him backe againe to the chamber, and willed him to staie vntill his confession should be put in writing & subscribed with his owne hand. Wherevnto the ministers which were present answered, and the earle also answered: Naie my lord, I prate you trouble me no more with these things, for now I haue another thing to muse vpon, which is to prepare me for my God. And sith I am at a point to go to my death, I can not write in the estate wherein I now am; and all these honest men can testifie what I haue spoken in that matter. With which answer the earle of Arrane being satisfied, he said to him, My lord you will be reconciled with me, for I haue done nothing vpon anie particular quarell against you. The earle of Morton replied, It is no time now to remember quarels, I haue no quarell to you nor to anie other, I forgiue you and all others as I would you forgaue me. And so after with a good courage he passed to the scaffold, who being vpon the scaffold, repeated in few words the substance of the things before confessed, & adding some exhortation to the people which he spake not before, in this sort.

Sure

Sure I am the king shall lose a good seruant this daie, and so he exhorted the people, saieng: I testifie before God, that as I professe the gospell which this daie is taught & professed in Scotland: so also now I willinglie laie downe my life in the persecution thereof. And albeit I haue not walked according thereunto as I ought, yet I am assured that God will be mercifull vnto me; and I charge you all in God which are professors of the gospell, that you continue the true professing and mainteining thereof to your power, as I would haue done God willing with my life, lands, and goods as long as I had liued: which if you do, I assure you God shall be mercifull vnto you; but if you do it not, be sure the vengeance of God shall fall vpon you, both in bodie and soule. As concerning all the rest of the words which he had vpon the scaffold, he spake them in effect and more amplie before. When all these speaches were ended vpon the scaffold, a comfortable prater was made by maister John Lawson, during the time of which prater, the erle Morton laie grouelling vpon his face before the place of execution, his bodie making great reboundings with sighes and sobs, being euident signes of the inward and mightie working of the spirit of God, as all they which were present, and knew what it was to be earnestlie moued in prater, might easilie perceiue.

The prater being ended, and sundrie comming to him before his death, he did most louinglie receiue them; who after he had taken vs all by the hand that were about him, & bidden vs farewell in the Lord, he passed both constantlie, patientlie, and humblie (without feare of death) to the place of execution, and laid his necke vnder the axe being vnbound. And there maister Walter putting him alwaies in mind to call vpon God; the earle continuallie cried vntill his head was striken off, Lord Jesus receiue my spirit, Lord Jesus receiue my spirit: which words he spake euen while the axe fell on his necke. Now what soeuer he had béene before, he constantlie died the seruant of God. And howsoeuer it be that his foes alleged, that as he liued proudlie, so he died proudlie; the charitable seruants of God could perceiue nothing in him but all kind of humilitie in his death: insomuch that we are assured, that his soule is receiued into the ioies and glories of the heauens; and we praie God, that they which are behind, maie learne by his example to die in the true feare of God our Lord. ¶ Thus far the confession & death of the earle Morton, penned by such of the presbyterie as were present thereat.

Castral. 423.

In a parlement holden in Edenburgh the eight & twentith of Januarie, in this yeare one thousand fiue hundred fourescore and one, being the fourtéenth of the kings reigne, were matters established, touching the ecclesiasticall gouernement, whereof I meane not fullie to set downe the same, sith my pen & purpose is bent to treat of politicall and not spirituall causes. Wherefore onelie determining but slenderlie, and by the waie to touch that matter, set forth in print at Cambridge, vnder the stampe of Thomas Thomas, printer for that vniuersitie, in this yeare of Christ one thousand fiue hundred foure score and six, we saie that the same booke, published by the Scots (and intituled, A generall confession of the true christian faith and religion, according to Gods word and our acts of parlement subscribed by the kings maiestie and his household, with diuerse others, &c.) hath further, after the preface thereof this title giuen vnto it. The estates of Scotland with the inhabitants of the same, professing Christ Jesus & his holie Gospell, to their naturall countriemen and to all other realmes & nations, professing the same Jesus Christ with them, wish grace, mercie, and peace from God the father of our Lord Jesus Christ, with the spirit of righteous iudgement of saluation.

A declaration of the Scotish faith, published and confirmed by the king.

After which title and salutation, the substance of the same booke, being declared in the forhead of the chapters following, conteineth these heads: First of God, then of the creation of man, next of originall sinne, fourthlie of the reuelation of the promise of the continuance, increase, and preseruation of the church, of the incarnation of Christ Jesus, why it becommeth the mediator to be verie God and man, of election, of Christes death, passion, and burtall, of his resurrection, of his ascension, of faith in the Holie-ghost, of the cause of good works, what works are reputed good before God, of the perfection of the law and the imperfection of man, of the church, of the immortalitie of soules, of the notes by which the true church is discerned from the false, and who shall be iudge of the doctrine, of the authoritie of the scriptures, of generall councels, of their power, authoritie & cause of their conuention, of the sacraments, of the right administration of the sacraments, to whome sacraments apperteine, of the ciuill magistrat, and of the gifts freelie giuen to the church, &c.

The discourse of all which matters, being in that booke largelie and iudiciallie handled, both for the declaration of the faith of those people, and for the further instruction of others, were shortlie after the agréement thereunto in that parlement confirmed by the king, and commanded to be published and vsed through his realme, as appeareth by this his following precept concerning the same.

The kings maiesties charge to all commissioners and ministers within his realme.

SEeing that we and our household haue subscribed & giuen this publike confession of our faith, to the good example of our subiects, we command and charge all commissioners and ministers to craue the same confession of their parishioners, and to procéed against the refusers according to our lawes, and order of the church; deliuering their names and lawfull processe to the ministers of our house, with all hast and diligence, vnder the paine of fortie pounds to be taken from their stipend: that we with the aduise of our councell may take order with such proud contemners of God, and our lawes. Subscribed with our hand at Holier-od house one thousand fiue hundred foure score and one, the second daie of March, the fourtéenth yere of our reigne.

Religion thus setled in Scotland, it fell hereupon that Amies duke of Leneux, to which honor he was not long before aduanced, as is alreadie set downe in the yeare of Christ one thousand fiue hundred three score and nineténe, was now in this yeare vpon displeasure, conceiued against him by others of the nobilitie, banished Scotland, and inforced to returne into France, there to passe the rest of his life as he had done before. In whose exile was performed an old prophesie, which I haue heard, that a nag of fiue shillings should beare all the dukes of England and Scotland. For when this duke was out of the Scotish kingdome, there was neither duke in that countrie or England. But as I greatlie fauor not these things, so yet finding manie of them to sort to vnhappie successe; I cannot altogither condemne them, especiallie sith I find two other which concerning the last duke of England, being the duke of Summerset, did prognosticat both the aduancement of religion by him, and that he should not long keepe his head on his shoulders, after that he began to make his stately buildings. Of which prophetical verses declaring the same, the first was,

[a] Cessabit missa cùm regnat equa marina.

[a] The mare of the sea, which backward is sea-mare.

The other prophesie mentioning his name of honor was in this sort, as also the time of his fall:

[b] Aestatis sedes cùm scandis ad alta per ædes,
Pro certo credes quòd caput perdere debes.

[b] Cummers seat, or Summerset.

And to prove that Summerset was manie yeres past called in Latine Aestatis sedes, I find this matter in Roger Wall, sometime an herald living in the time of Henrie the fift, who named him accordinglie, when the said author excusing himselfe of all eloquence, and complaining of his owne rudenesse, sent his booke to D. John Summerset to correct; which doctor being the kings schoolemaster and physician, a great learned man well séene in the mathematikes, one that had written much therin, and verie eloquent also, was (as this Roger Wall thought) most meet to haue the oversight of his workes: which matter is set downe in the latter end of the same worke of the acts of Henrie the fift.

v. Castrat. 434. 435.

Roger Wall submitteth his worke to the censure of D. John Summerset.

Vecors, inculta, pauper & pannosa pagina, video quia nuditatem, pauperiem, ac ruditatem tuam expauescens patefaci: ad hoc immensæ verecundiæ terrore ducta in lustralibus latebris, & abditis desertis, & inuijs latitare decreuisti, fortassis tamen, si quenquam reperies qui nuditatem tuam operire, pauperiem tuam locupletare, & ruditatem tuam reformare dignaretur, indutura fores animositatis spiritum processura in lucem. Eia igitur consilijs meis adquiescere non deseras: & meis monitis edocta, doctorem glorioſum inuenies, qui* Aestatis sedes glorioſum cognomẽ sortitus est, &c. Supplica igitur pauperrima pagina pauperibus illis, vt tibi Aestatis sedem velint ostendere, &c. After which this Wall setteth downe the supplication, which his booke should dedicat to this doctor (when he hath found him) in these verses, beginning also with the same name of Aestatis sedes, in English Summerseat:

*Summerseat.

v. Castrat. 435.

Fertilis Aestatis florida sedes,

Gloria doctorum gemma scientum,
Eloquij pelagus, lux medicina,
Pectore cœlesti cœlica condens,
Præradians alijs lumine mentis,

Et motus primi mobilis orbis,
Nec latet eiusdem mira rapina,
Quid flammiuomus ignis in orbe,
Aereique sinus abdyta nosti? &c.

v. Castrat. 435

Thus having expressed the words and verses of Roger Wall, which in Latine termed some hundred yeares passed (as you haue heard before) the name of Summerset by the words of Aestatis sedes, I haue trulie béene the willinger to set downe the same by waie of digression (besides the former declared causes which moued me thereunto) for that I would not suffer so worthie a man as that John Summerset was to be buried in oblivion.

v. Castrat. 435.

But leaving our Englishmen, let vs returne to the affaires of Scots and Scotland: intreating first of some thing done by them in the low countries, where one Steward a Scot, having had charge of men in some part of the low countries of Flanders, Zeland, and Holland, vnder William of Nassaw, earle of Aurange, did now fall from the states of that countrie, emploie all his force on the king of Spaines side, and went to assist the prince of Parma (the deputie of king Philip in those parts) because the states did not paie to him and his soldiors their due stipend and wages for the wars. At what time also the garison of Bzurels were for the like cause in an vproze. But some portion of monie being offered vnto them, they were for that time somewhat pacified. All which notwithstanding, one certeine Scot, called Lichfield, & surnamed Semple, being capteine of the garison of Lire, and long vnpaied his sallarie for those warres, did in vaine manie times demand that monie due vnto him. Wherupon, imagining with himselfe how he might deceiue Hietfield the gouernour of the citie, as they had beguiled him in deteining of his due, he deuised with a new stratagem to bring this towne into the subiection of Philip king of Spaine. Wherefore, feining him selfe that he would in the middest of the night with his people go forth to bring home some great bootie for his and the townes benefit, he departed the towne, and late in the night gathered together a great preie of catell, horses, oxen, kine, sheepe, and such like, with some prisoners of the kings part. All which he brought to the towne gate of Lire, and then commanded the gates to be opened vnto him, whereby they with their bootie might enter all at once. But the porter fearing at such time of night to set the gates fall abrode, onelie opened a little wicket or doze, thereby to receiue Semple into the towne. Which thing Semple then perceiuing (& not finding all things to answer his expectation) feined that the enimies were hard at their backs, would kill them all, and recouer their bootie, vnlesse he did speedilie open the great gate, through the same to receiue them into the towne all at once. Then the porter beléeuing all this to be true, forthwith set open the great gates of the citie; which done, the Scot entereth thereat, slue those which kept the watch, possessed the towne, & into the same receiued the kings souldiors, which were not farre behind, but secretlie laie in wait expecting the successe of this deuise. By which meanes the Spaniards and their followers first woone the market place, and the next daie after the kalends of August reduced the whole towne of Lire vnder their owne subiection: the same Lire being a place well fensed, and set in such a conuenient soile, that it would prohibit all passage and carriage to come to Antwerpe, Mechelin and Bzurels.

The Spaniards obteine Lire by a stratagem deuised by the Scots.

v. Castr. 436.

In March was renewed a great & old contention betweene the lord Marwell earle Morton warden of the west marches of Scotland, and the lard of Johnstane; the occasion of which new dissention proceeded of an old enimitie begun in the time of Dowglasse earle Morton beheaded, as before in the yeare of Christ one thousand fiue hundred eightie and one, touching the receiuing of the same wardenship. In which hurlie burlie the lard of Johnstane behaued himselfe verie rigorouslie against the lord Marwell, in blowing vp with gunpowder the locks of the castell of Lochmaben. Which dissention secretlie after the death of Dowglasse earle Morton, continuing betweene the lord Marwell and Johnstane, with further increase of malice, they in this yeere sought a fresh reuenge thereof, sith the lard Johnstane had not (before this) either power or meanes to incounter with the lord Marwell. But now the ladie Johnstane (being verie familiar and fauored with and of James Steward earle of Arrane) obteined of the king some succors of men of warre against the lord Marwell earle Morton, hir husband (as was supposed) not being able otherwise to make his part good against the same earle. Wherupon capteine Lamie and capteine Gzanestane were sent with two companies of hackbuts vnto the releefe of the lard of Johnstane. Who being thus furnished, did in the kings name raise the nobilitie and countrie thereabout to assist him with their powers: which being had, he meant and therefore went to haue ioined with the said two capteines Lamie and Gzanestane. But as man purposeth, and God disposeth quite

quite contrarie to our determination. So the lard Johnſtane was diſappointed of that meeting; for the earle Morton (whoſe heedfull watch was not idle in learning out the deuiſes of his enimies, a needfull policie for all ſuch as intend to bring great actions to effect) hauing intelligence by ſome of his friends tendering his ſafetie, of this determination and preparation of the lard Johnſtane, and wiſelie (as behoued him) ſeeing what danger might riſe vnto him, if their two forces met, which would riſe to a greater number than he were able to incounter, and iudging it beſt in the beginning to prouide for miſchiefe, and to ſtop their paſſage, did prepare to preuent all their deuiſes, and for that cauſe ſent his baſe brother Robert Marwell capteine of Langholme with ſome horſſemen and footmen vnder the conduct of James Fraiſer brother to the lord of Fulloth, which Robert meeting on Craiford mere with the foreſaid capteins Lamie and Craneſtane, before that they had ioined with the lard Johnſtane gaue the charge vpon them, and that ſo fiercelie as they ouerthrew the whole ſtrength of his enimies, ſlue Lamie, tooke Craneſtane priſoner, and ſo handled the matter that all the reſt were taken or ſlaine except ſome few, who ſought their liues by the benefit of flieng. After which victorie the report thereof came to the lard Johnſtane, who deſirous to be reuenged thereof, vſed the helpe of other meanes when he perceiued that force would not preuaile. And for that cauſe aſſembling ſuch power as he had, he vſed the ſtrength of one element againſt an other, of the higheſt againſt the loweſt, of the heauen againſt the earth, of the fire againſt mettall, and of burning againſt fighting. For with all ſpeed he haſtened to the lands of the earle Morton, which he cruellie ſpoiled, and in the ſame did burne certeine houſes and other places belonging to the earle, as Comers trees, Duncoll, Colwhill, and ſuch like. Whereupon the earle Morton, who in like ſort did not neglect his owne cauſe, but as opportunitie ſerued, ſought the requitall thereof, did with the like furie, but with more hurt, enter the lands of Johnſtane, vtterlie ſpoiled them, and yet not ſo ſatiſfied, committed to the fire both the caſtels of Louchhouſe and Louchwood belonging to Johnſtane, and ſlue ſundrie gentlemen of name, the friends to Johnſtane, being perſons of good ſort, as the two brothers of Lokierbie, a brother of the lord Wanefraie, ſome of the ſons of John of Johnſtane of Holgill, with others. Which done, the earle Morton proceeded vnto further purſute, and determining fullie to reuenge himſelfe vpon Johnſtane, and his followers, forced the lard Johnſtane himſelfe to flie his furie. Wherefore he fled to a ſtrong houſe called the Bonſhaw caſtell belonging to Edward Prwine of the Bonſhaw, whome the earle purſued, and beſieged in the ſame place, at what time he ſo battered the caſtell with artillerie, that the houſe was almoſt gotten. Which being perceiued of thoſe within, not able to make further reſiſtance, they fell to parlée, and ſo to compoſition; whereby in the end the matter was wholie compounded and ended betweéne them, by the mediation and furtherance of the lord Scrope of England, with certeine conditions to be performed as well on the part of the earle as of the lard Johnſtane. But the coles of inward griefe being couered with cold aſhes of outward reconcilliation, did not long lie couered, but in the end began afreſh to ſhew their fire. For the lard Johnſtane falling from the ſaid accord, vpon what occaſion I know not, either for cauſe giuen by the earle Morton, or for an euill diſpoſition in himſelfe, or for both, they burſt forth againe into the like conflicts & part taking, which in the end falling to the worſt, Robert Marwell baſe brother to earle Morton ſent againſt capteine Lamie.

Capteine Lamie & Craneſtane ouerthrowen.

The caſtels Louchhouſe and Louchwood burnt.

The lard Johnſtane forced to flie.

The lord Scrope compounded the contention betweéne earle Morton and the lard Johnſtane.

for the lard Johnſtane, he was taken betwéen Tinwall and the Warden ditches (where he was laid in ambuſh to haue performed ſome action againſt the ſaid Robert Marwell comming from the towne of Domfreies to Laugham from the earle Morton his brother) by William Carrutheris (baron of Holmence and capteine of the kings caſtell named Traiſe) being by the earle Morton appointed to incounter with the ſaid lard Johnſtane: which this baron was the more willing to do, becauſe he intirelie loued the earle, and had alwaies from the beginning followed the earles faction.

The lard Johnſtane taken.

These things thus performed and the ſucceſſe therof comming to the kings knowledge, he grew ſo heauilie diſpleaſed with the earle Morton, that he was ſcarſe able to ſuſteine the kings diſpleaſure, by reaſon that the earle attempted theſe things againſt the kings mind, when the king had ſupported the lard Johnſtane with men and weapons. But the kings diſpleaſure onlie growing againſt the earle, was partlie for that the earle of Arrane did bitterlie exaſperat the cauſe againſt him, and partlie by the perſuaſion & lamentation of the ladie of Johnſtane, whereof the laſt was enimie to the earle, as of dutie ſhe ought in reſpect of hir huſband, and the firſt (which was the earle of Arrane) became a bitter and heauie enimie beſides all reaſon againſt earle Morton, becauſe that Morton refuſed to exchange the baronies of Poke and Marwell Hewch with Arrane, which moſt inſtantlie required the ſame, in reſpect they adioined neere vnto other lands which Arrane had procured to himſelfe. For although that Arrane would in place of thoſe required lands haue deliuered others of no leſſe value and honor (for he would haue giuen the baronie of Kinneile for the ſame) yet Morton had good cauſe and no leſſe reaſon not to yeeld therevnto: as well for that Marwell Hewch was his ancient inheritance, and the firſt land which his anceſtors had, and whereof they tooke the name of lord Marwell; as for that, that there were manie of the ſurname of the Marwels, who dwelling vpon theſe lands, would not become ſubiect to the earle of Arrane, as they muſt haue beene if he had departed with thoſe lands; amongſt which Marwels ſo refuſing to become tenants to Arrane, were John Marwell lard of Newarke, and William Marwell lard of Poke.

The king diſpleaſed with earle Morton for the cauſe of the lard Johnſtane.

The earle of Arrane would exchange lands with the earle Morton.

The Marwels would not be ſubiect to the earle of Arrane.

This thus handled, the king aſſembled a parlement in Paie, wherein were certeine lawes enacted, which giuing occaſion to ſome of the nobilitie and clergie to miſconceiue thereof, and to depart the realme, did after miniſter cauſe to the king (for the more diſcharge of his honour, the better explaining of the ſaid lawes, and the manifeſting of ſecret practiſes againſt him) to ſet downe this following declaration thereof to the view of the world. Wherin he ſhewed himſelfe of a rare and good diſpoſition, in that he would humble himſelfe beneath the maieſtie of his crowne, publikelie to render a reaſon to his neighbours and to his ſubiects of his dealings, towards ſuch as were vnder his gouernment, ſith he was not bound therevnto, being to diſpoſe of thoſe his ſubiects according to the lawes of his realme and the cuſtomes of thoſe countries. But before I ſet downe that declaration, I thinke it not vnmeet to ſaie ſomewhat of ſuch things as went before, and were the cauſe of ſetting forth of the ſame declaration. There were ſome lawes in the ſame parlement enacted for the reformation of religion, which to the king ſeemed to be growne ouer dangerous, in ſéeking a certeine equalitie of gouernment in the eccleſiaſticall hierarchie. Upon which law eſtabliſhed, the earles of Angus and Mar, with diuers others of the temporaltie and the ſpiritualtie, as Andrew Melvine, and ſuch as profeſſed the purer and reformed religion (as it was termed) were inforced for the vſe of their conſcience and for other cauſes, to baniſh themſelues from their countrie, and to flie into England there to vſe the libertie of their religion, and to prouide for the ſafetie of their perſons, who comming into this realme, made their abode and ſoiourned at Norwich. About which time alſo of their departure out of Scotland, there was a ſuppoſed treaſon diſcouered by Robert Hamilton vnto the king, intended to be practiſed againſt his maieſtie, whereupon ſome were ſummoned vpon ſuſpicion, ſome were apprehended, and ſome were executed for the ſame cauſe. Of the firſt ſort, the lord Blakater and George Dowglaſſe were ſummoned to the court vpon ſuſpicion that they were conſenting and conceling to and of the ſame treaſons. For the ſecond part touching the ſame, the lord of Donthaſell, the lord of Dunkreth, the lord of Baithkict, Robert Hamilton of Inchmachan, and James Sterling, were apprehended at the kings court: beſides which John Hopingell of the Mores was taken at his owne houſe by the capteine of the kings gard, and the lord Keier with the lord Paius and other gentlemen were taken about Sterling; and laſtlie the lord Donthaſell and the lord Paius were executed, with the lord Ruthwine earle of Gowrike, treaſuror of Scotland, who was beheaded in Scotland. Which being thus done, the king as is before ſaid made this following declaration vpon the ſaid acts of parlement, in which he ſheweth reaſon and cauſe why he ought and might both make and execute thoſe lawes, with a further explanation alſo of the ſame lawes deliuered in that declaration with theſe words.

FOr as much as there is ſome euill affected men that goeth about ſo farre as in them lieth, to inuent lies and tales to ſlander and impaire the kings maieſties fame and honor, & to raiſe reports as if his maieſtie had declined to papiſtrie, & that he had made manie acts to aboliſh the free paſſage of the goſpell, good order and diſcipline in the church: which brutes are mainteined by rebellious ſubiects, who would gladlie couer their ſeditious enterpriſes vnder pretenſe of religion (albeit there can be no good religion in ſuch as raiſe rebellion to diſquiet the ſtate of their natiue ſouereigne, and periuredlie doth ſtand againſt the oth, band, & obligation of their faith, whereunto they haue ſubſcribed) therfore that his maieſties faithfull ſubiects be not abuſed with ſuch ſlanderous reports, and his highneſſe good affectionat friends in other countries mate vnderſtand the verities of his vpright intention, his highneſſe hath commanded this breefe declaration of certeine of his maieſties acts of parlement holden in Maie one thouſand fiue hundred foure ſcore and foure, to be publiſhed and imprinted, to the effect that the indirect practiſes of ſuch as ſlander his maieſtie and his lawes maie be detected and diſcouered.

In the firſt act his maieſtie ratifieth and approueth the true profeſſion of the goſpell, ſincere preaching of the word and adminiſtration of the ſacraments, preſentlie by the goodneſſe of God eſtabliſhed within this realme, and alloweth of the confeſſion of the faith ſet downe by act of parlement the firſt yere of his maieſties reigne. Likewiſe his highneſſe not onlie profeſſeth the ſame in all ſinceritie, but (praiſed be God) is come to that ripeneſſe of iudgement by reading and hearing the word of God, that his highneſſe is able to conuince and ouerthrow by the doctrine of the prophets and apoſtles the moſt learned of the contrarie ſect. So that (as Plato affirmeth that common wealth to be counted happie wherein a philoſopher reigneth, or he that reigneth is a philoſopher) we maie much more eſteeme this countrie of Scotland to be fortunate, wherein our king is a diuine, and whoſe hart is repleniſhed with the knowledge of the heauenlie philoſophie: for the comfort not onlie of his good ſubiects and friends in other countries but of them that profeſſeth the goſpell euerie where, he being a king of great wiſedome, and by his birth right borne to great poſſeſſions; but much more his highneſſe, vertue, godlineſſe and learning, and dailie increaſe of all heauenlie ſciences, doth promiſe and aſſure him of the mightie protection of God, and fauour of all them that feare his holie name.

In the ſecond act his maieſties totall authoritie ouer all eſtates both ſpirituall and temporall is confirmed: which act ſome of malice, and ſome of ignorance doth traduce, as if his maieſtie pretended to be called the head of the church, a name which his maieſtie acknowledgeth to be proper and peculiar to the ſonne of God the ſauiour of the world, who is the head, and beſtoweth life ſpirituall vpon the members of his myſticall bodie, and he hauing receiued the holie ſpirit in all abundance, maketh euerie one of the faithfull partakers thereof, according to the meaſure of faith beſtowed vpon them, of the which number of the faithfull vnder the head Chriſt, his maieſtie acknowledgeth himſelfe to be a member baptiſed in his name, partaker of the miſterie of the croſſe and holie communion, and attending with the faithfull for the comming of the Lord and the finall reſurrection of Gods elect. And notwithſtanding his maieſtie ſurelie vnderſtandeth by the ſcriptures, that he is the cheefe and principall member appointed by the law of God, to ſee God glorified, vice puniſhed and vertue mainteined within his realme: and the ſouereigne iudgment of a godlie quietneſſe & order in the common wealth, to apperteine to his highneſſe care and ſolicitude. Which power and authoritie of his highneſſe, certeine miniſters being called before his maieſtie for their ſeditious and factious ſermons in ſtirring vp the people to rebellion againſt their natiue king (by the inſtigation of ſundrie vnquiet ſpirits) would in no wiſe acknowledge but diſclaime his maieſties authoritie as an incompetent iudge: and eſpeciallie one called maiſter Andrew Melvin of a ſalt and fierie humor, vſurping the pulpit of Saundois, without anie lawfull calling, and priuie at that time to certeine conſpiracies attempted againſt his maieſtie and crowne, went about in a ſermon vpon a ſundaie, to inflame the harts of the people by odious compariſons of his maieſties progenitors and councell, albeit the dutie of a faithfull preacher of the goſpell be rather to exhort the people to obedience of their natiue king, and not by popular ſermons (which hath beene the euerſion and decaie of great cities and common wealths, and hath greatlie in times paſt bred diſquietneſſe to the ſtate thereby) to trouble and perturbe the countrie. The ſaid maiſter Andrew being called before his highneſſe, preſumptuouſlie anſwered that he would not be iudged by the king and councell, becauſe he had ſpoken the ſame in pulpit, which pulpit in effect he alleged to be exempted from the iudgement and correction of princes, as if that holie place ſanctified to the word of God and to the breaking of the bread of life, might be anie colour to anie ſedition in word or deed againſt the lawfull authoritie, without puniſhment. Alwaies his maieſtie (being of himſelfe a moſt gratious prince) was not willing to haue vſed ſed anie rigor againſt the ſaid maiſter Andrew, if he had humblie ſubmitted himſelfe, acknowledged his offenſe, and craued pardon: who notwithſtanding afraid of his owne giltineſſe, being priuie to diuers conſpirators before, fled out of the realme, whoſe naughtie & preſumptuous refuſing of his highneſſe iudgement, was the occaſion of the making of this ſecond act: that is, that none ſhould decline from his highneſſe authoritie, in reſpect that the common prouerbe beareth Ex malis moribus bonæ leges natæ ſunt, which is, that Of euill maners good lawes proceed. And in verie deed it wanteth not anie right intollerable arrogancie in anie ſubiect called before his prince, profeſſing and authoriſing the ſame truth, to diſclaime his authoritie, neither do the prophets, apoſtles, or others (conducted by the ſpirit of God) miniſter the like example: for it is a great error to affirme (as manie do) that princes and magiſtrats haue onlie power to take order in ciuill affaires, and that eccleſiaſticall matters do onelie belong to the miniſterie.

By which meanes the pope of Rome hath exempted himſelfe and his cleargie from all iudgment of princes, and he made himſelfe to be iudge of iudges, and to be iudged of no man: whereas by the contrarie, not onelie by the example of the godlie gouernors, iudges, and kings of the old teſtament; but alſo by the new teſtament, and the whole hiſtorie of the primitiue church, in which the emperors being iudges ouer the biſhops of Rome, depoſed them from their ſeats, appointed iudges to decide and determine cauſes eccleſiaſticall, and challenge innocent men, as Athanaſius from the determination of the councell holden at Tirus, and by infinit good reaſons which ſhall be ſet downe by the grace of God in an other ſeuerall worke, and ſhall be ſufficientlie proued and verified. But this appéreth at this preſent to be an vntimelie and vnprofitable queſtion, which hath no ground vpon their part, but of the prepoſterous imitation of the pretended iuriſdiction of the pope of Rome. For if there were anie queſtion of this land of hereſie, whereby the profound myſteries of the ſcriptures behoued to be ſearched forth, his maieſtie would vſe the ſame remedie (as moſt expedient) which the moſt godlie emperors haue vſed: and his maieſtie following their example would allow the councell of learned paſtors, that by conference of ſcriptures the veritie might be opened, and hereſie repreſſed.

But God be thanked, we haue no ſuch controuerſies in this land, neither hath anie hereſie taken anie déepe rot in the countrie; but that certeine of the miniſterie, ioining themſelues to rebels haue trauelled to diſquiet the ſtate with ſuch queſtions, that the people might imbrace anie ſiniſter opinion of his maieſties vpright proceedings, and factions might be nouriſhed and interteined in the countrie: neither is it his maieſties meaning nor intention in anie ſort, to take awaie the lawfull and ordinarie iudgement in the church, whereby diſcipline and good order might decaie; but rather to preſerue, increaſe, and mainteine the ſame. And as there is in this realme, iuſtices, conſtables, ſhiriffes, prouoſts, bailiffes, and other iudges in temporall matters: ſo his maieſtie alloweth that all things might be done in order, and a godlie quietnes may be preſerued in the whole eſtate; the ſynodall aſſemblies by the biſhops, or commiſſioners, where the place was vſed to be conuenient, twiſe in the yeare, to haue the ordinarie triall of matters belonging to the miniſterie and their eſtate: alwaies reſeruing to his highneſſe, that if they, or anie of them do amiſſe, neglect their dutie, diſquiet the eſtate, or offend in anie ſuch maner and ſort, that they in no waies pretend anie immunitie, priuilege, and exemption, which onelie was inuented by the popes of Rome, to tread vnder foot the ſcepter of princes, and to eſtabliſh an eccleſiaſticall tyrannie within this countrie, vnder pretenſe of new inuented preſbyters, which neither ſhould anſwer to the king nor biſhop vnder his maieſtie: but ſhould haue ſuch infinit iuriſdiction, as neither the law of God nor man can tollerat; which is onelie his maieſties intention to repreſſe, and not to take awaie anie godlie or due order in the church, as hereafter ſhall appeare.

The third act of his maieſties foreſaid parlement diſchargeth all iudgements eccleſiaſticall, and all aſſemblies which are not allowed by his maieſties parlement. Which act ſpeciallie concerneth the remouing and diſcharging of that forme, inuented in this land, called the preſbyterie: wherein a number of miniſters of certeine precincts and bounds, accounting themſelues to be equall, without anie difference, and gathering vnto them certeine gentlemen and others of his maieſties ſubiects, vſurpe the whole eccleſiaſticall iuriſdiction, & altereth the laws at their owne pleaſure, without the knowledge or approbation of the king, or of the eſtate: a forme of doing without example of anie nation, ſubiect to a chriſtian prince. The perill thereof did ſo increaſe, that in caſe it had not bæne repreſſed in due ſeaſon, & forbidden by his maieſties laws, the ſame had troubled the whole countrie: and being tried by his highneſſe to be the ouerthrow of his maieſties eſtate, the decaie of his crowne, and a readie introduction to Anabaptiſtrie, and popular confuſion in all eſtates; his maieſtie hath giuen commandement againſt the ſame. And that the reader may know the danger thereof by manie inconueniences, which thereby inſueth in this land, I will onelie ſet downe one, whereby they may vnderſtand what perill was in the reſt.

The ambaſſador of France, returning home into his countrie, commanded the prouoſts, bailiffes, and conſtable of Edenburgh to make him a banket, that he might be receiued honorablie according to the amitie of ancient times betwéene the two nations. This commandement was giuen on the ſaturdaie by his highneſſe, and the banket appointed to be on the mondaie. A number of the foreſaid pretended preſbyterie vnderſtanding thereof, aſſembled themſelues on the ſundaie in the morning, and preſumptouſlie determined & agréed, that the miniſters of Edenburgh ſhould proclame a faſting vpon the ſame mondaie; where their ſeuerall miniſters one after another made thrée ſeuerall ſermons, and inuectiues againſt the prouoſts, bailiffes, and councell for the time, and the noble men in the countrie; who repared to the banket at his maieſties command. The foreſaid preſbyterie called and perſuaded them, and ſcarſelie by his maieſties authoritie could be withholden from excommunicating the magiſtrats and noble men, for obeieng onelie his highneſſe lawfull command; which the law of all countries called Ius gentium, requires towards ambaſſadors of forren countries. And not onelie in this, but innumerable other things, their commandement was proclamed directlie, vnder the paine of excommunication to the kings maieſtie and his lawes.

Which forme of proceeding ingendered nothing but diſquietneſſe, ſedition, and trouble: as may manifeſtlie appeare, in that the eſpeciall authors of the inuenting, promoting, and affiſting of the foreſaid pretended preſbyterie, hath ioined themſelues with his maieſties rebels; and flieng forth of the realme, in reſpect of their guiltineſſe, hath diſcouered what malicious practiſes was deuiſed amongſt them, if God had not in time prouided remedie.

The other forme of iudgement, which his maiestie hath discharged, is the generall assemblie of the whole clergie in the realme: vnder pretense whereof a number of ministers from sundrie presbyteries did assemble, with some gentlemen of the countrie; whereof, some for that time (malcontents of the state) sought that colour as fauorers of the ministerie, by the which they haue practised manie enterprises in the realme; where there was no certeine law in ecclesiasticall affaires, but all depended vpon the said generall conuention, where the laws of the church were alterable after the number of voices, which for the most part succéded vnto the most vnlearned of the multitude.

This generall assemblie amongst other things, did appoint and agrée with his maiesties regents in his minoritie, that the *estate of bishops should be maintained and authorised, as is registred in the bookes of councell, and subscribed by the commissioners for the time. Which order was obserued manie yeares, and bishops by their consents appointed to their dioceese, vntill within this late time, in assemblies holden at Dundée, and Glascow, respecting the foresaid ministers and assemblies, take vpon them contrarie to their owne handwriting, to discharge the estate, and to declare the same to be vnlawfull in their pretended manner. And there commanded the bishops of the countrie, to demit and leaue their offices and iurisdictions, and that in no wise they should passe to the kings councell or parlement, without commission obteined from their assemblie: that they should confirme nothing in parlement and councell, but according to their acts and iniunctions. And further, they directed their commissioners to the kings maiestie, commanding him and the councell vnder paine of the censures of the church (whereby they vnderstood excommunication) to appoint no bishop in time to come, because they had concluded that estate to be vnlawfull. And notwithstanding, that which they would haue detected in the bishops, they purposed to erect in themselues, desiring that such commissioners as they should send to parlement and councell, might be authorised in place of the estate: wherby it should haue come to passe, that whereas now his maiestie may select the most godlie, learned, wise, and experimented of the ministerie, to be on his maiesties estate, his highnesse should haue bene by that meanes compelled to accept such as the multitude, by an od consent of the most vnlearned, should haue appointed, which could not tend but to the ouerthrow of the realme.

After they had discharged bishops, they agréed to haue superintendents, commissioners, and visitors: but in the end they decerned that there should be no difference amongst the ministers, and imagined that new forme of presbyterie, whereof we haue spoken before. Neither was there anie other apparance that they should haue staied from such dailie alterations in the common-wealth, which could not but continuallie be disquieted, where the law of conscience, which they mainteined by the sword of cursing, was subiect to such mutations, at the arbitrement of a number, whereof the most part had not greatlie tasted of learning. At once the foresaid assemblie was accustomed, not onelie to prescribe the law to the king and estate, but also did at certeine times appoint generall fastings throughout the realme; especiallie, when some factioner in the countrie was to moue anie great enterprise. For at the fast, all the ministers were commanded by the assemblie to sing one song, and to crie out vpon the abuses (as they termed it) of the court and estate for the time: whereby is most certeine great alterations to haue insued in this land; while at the good pleasure of God, and his blessing towards his maiestie, the pretense of the last fast was discouered, and his highnesse deliuered from such attempts, whereby his maiestie hath bene iustlie moued to discharge such conuentions, which might import so preiudiciallie to his estate.

But especiallie his maiestie had no small occasion, whereas the same assemblie being met at Edenburgh, did authorise and auow the fact perpetrate at Ruthwen, in the taking of his highnesse most noble person. The which déed notwithstanding, with the aduise of his estates in parlement accounted to be treason, the said assemblie estéeming their iudgement to be the souereigne iudgement of the realme, hath not onlie approued the same, but also ordeined all them to be excommunicate that would not subscribe and allow the same. So the acts of this assemblie, and the lawes of the estate directed, weied in ciuill matter, with the which the assemblie should not haue medled, it behoued his highnesse either to discharge himselfe of the crowne, or the ministerie of the forme of the assemblie, which in déed of it selfe, without the kings maiesties licence & approbation, could not be lawfull, like as generall councels at no time could assemble, without the commandement of the emperor for the time. And our king hath no lesse power within his owne realme than anie of them had in the empire. Yea the bishop of S. Andrewes had not in time of poperie, power to conuent the bishops and clergie out of their owne dioceese, without licence giuen before by his highnes most noble progenitors of good memorie, and the causes thereof intimate and allowed.

Notwithstanding that his maiesties intention and meaning maie fullie be vnderstood, it is his highnesse will, that the bishop or commissioners of anie dioceese or prouince, or part thereof, shall at their visitation appoint in euerie parish, according to the greatnesse thereof, some honest, vertuous, and discréet men, to aid and assist the minister, and to haue the ouersight and censure of the maners and behauior of the people of that parish. And if there be anie notable offense, worthie of punishment, that the bishop and commissioners be aduertised thereof, who shall haue an officer of armes to be assistant for the punishment of vice and executions to follow therevpon: that they who contemne the godlie and lawfull order of the church, maie find by experience his maiesties displeasure, and be punished according to their deseruings. And further, his maiestie vpon necessarie occasions which shall fall forth, by diuers maners of waies amongst the clergie, vpon humble suplication made to his highnesse, will not refuse to grant them licence to assist the bishops, commissioners, and some of the most vertuous, learned and godlie of their dioceese, where such ecclesiasticall matters, as apperteine to the vniformitie of doctrine and conuersation of a godlie order in the church, maie be intreated and concluded in his maiesties owne presence, or some of his honorable councell, who shall assist for the time: where if necessitie so require, a publike fast throughout the whole realme maie be commanded, and by his maiesties authoritie proclamed, to auoid the imminent displeasure and danger of the wrath of the Lords iudgements, which is the right end of publike humilitie, and not vnder pretense thereof to couer such enterprises, as haue heretofore disquieted and troubled the peace of this common wealth.

The twentith act ratifieth and approueth, and establisheth the estate of the bishops within the realme, to haue the ouersight and iurisdiction, euerie one in their owne dioceese: which forme of gouernement, and rule in eccleſiaſticall affaires, hath not onlie continued in the church from the daies of the apoſtles, by continuall ſucceſſion of time, and manie martyrs in that calling ſhed their bloud for the truth: but alſo ſith this realme imbraced and receiued the chriſtian religion, the ſame eſtate hath bene mainteined, to the welfare of the church, and quietnes of the realme without anie interruption, vntill within theſe few yeares, ſome curious and buſie men haue practiſed to induce into the miniſterie an equalitie in all things, aſwell concerning the preaching of the word, adminiſtration of the ſacraments, as likewiſe in diſcipline, order, and policie. The which confuſion his maieſtie finding by moſt dangerous experience, to haue bene the mother and nurſe of great factions, ſeditions, and troubles within this realme, hath with aduiſe of his highnes eſtates, aduiſedlie concluded, the ſaid pretended partie in diſcipline, orders and policie in the church, to be no longer to be tolerated in his countrie, but the ſolicitude & care of all churches in one dioceſſe to apperteins to the biſhop and commiſſioners therof, who ſhall be anſwerable to God, and his maieſtie, and eſtates, for the right adminiſtration and diſcharge of the office of particular miniſters, within the bounds of his iuriſdiction. For as it becommeth his maieſtie, as Euſebius writeth of Conſtantinus the great, to be a biſhop of biſhops, and vniuerſall biſhop within his realme, in ſo far as his maieſtie ſhould apoint euerie one to diſcharge his duetie: which his highneſſe cannot, his countrie being large and great, take him to euerie miniſter that ſhall offend and tranſgreſſe againſt dutie, or quarell with the whole number of the miniſterie: but it behoueth his maieſtie to haue biſhops & ouerſeers vnder him which maie be anſwerable for ſuch bounds, as the law and order of the countrie hath limited and apointed to euerie one of them. And that they hauing acceſſe to his maieſties parlement and councell, maie intercede for the reſt of the brethren of the miniſterie, propone their greefe vnto his highneſſe and eſtates, and receiue his maieſties fauorable anſwere therein. The which forme doth preſerue a godlie quietneſſe, vnitie, concord and peace in the eſtate, and one vniforme order in the church. As contrariwiſe, the pretended equalitie diuideth the ſame, and vnder the pretenſe of equalitie maketh the ſame of the moſt craftie and ſubtile dealers to be aduanced and inriched: and in pretending of partie, to ſeeke nothing but their owne ambition and aduancement aboue the reſt of the ſimple ſort.

And notwithſtanding that his maieſtie hath reeſtabliſhed the ſaid eſtate, it is not his highneſſe will and intent, that the foreſaid biſhop ſhall haue ſuch full power as to do within his dioceſſe what he pleaſeth. For his maieſtie cannot allow of anie popular confuſion, wherein (as the prouerbe ſaith) Nulla tyrannis æquiparanda eſt tyrannidi multitudinis, that is: No tyrannie can be compared to the tyrannie of a multitude, hauing commandement and power in his hands: ſo on the other part his maieſties will is, that the biſhops authoritie in anie graue matter, be limited to the councell of thirteene of the moſt ancient, wiſe, and godlie perſons of his dioceſſe, ſelected out of the whole ſynodall aſſemblie of the prouince: by whoſe aduiſe, or at the leaſt the moſt part thereof, the weightie affaires of the church maie be gouerned to the glorie of God, and quietnes of the realme. Further it is his highneſſe will and commandement, that their biſhops and commiſſioners twiſe in the yeare, to wit, ten daies after Eaſter, and the firſt of September, hold their ſynodall aſſemblies in euerie dioceſſe, for the keeping of good orders therein: and if anie be ſtubborne, or contemne within their bounds the good order of the church, that it maie be declared vnto his maieſtie, and puniſhed to the example of others, according to their deſeruings. Neither is it his maieſties meaning or intent, that ſuch biſhops or commiſſioners as ſhall be apointed, ſhall receiue their onelie and full commiſſion of his maieſtie without admiſſion ordinarie, by ſuch as are appointed to that effect in the church: but hauing his highneſſe nomination, preſentation, and commendation as lawfull and onlie patrone, they to be tried and examined, that their qualities are ſuch as they are able to diſcharge their cure and office. And if it ſhall happen anie of the ſaid biſhops or commiſſioners, to be negligent in their office, or to be ſlanderous or offenſiue in their behauior, life, and maners, in time to come, it is not his highneſſe will, that they ſhall be exempted from correction, notwithſtanding anie priuilege of his highnes eſtate, councell or parlement: but their labors, trauels, diligence and behauiors, to be tried in the generall aſſemblie, not conſiſting of a confuſed multitude, as it was before; but of ſuch worſhipfull perſons as is heretofore preſcribed in his highneſſe preſence, or his deputies to that effect.

Laſtlie his maieſtie giueth commiſſion to the ſaid biſhops or commiſſioners at their viſitations, to conſider in what part of the countrie, the enterpriſe, or interpretation of the ſcripture, by conference of a certeine number of the miniſterie within thoſe bounds, maie be moſt commodiouſlie once in euerie fifteene daies. For as his maieſtie inhibits all vnlawfull meetings, that maie ingender trouble and contention in the countrie: ſo his maieſtie is well affected to ſee the miniſterie increaſe in knowledge and vnderſtanding, and by all meanes to fortifie and aduance the ſame. Wherein his highneſſe commandement is, that a graue, wiſe, and ſage man ſhall be appointed preſident, who maie haue the ouerſight of theſe bounds, and be anſwerable therefore to the biſhop, his councell and ſynod; and he to be reſpected reaſonablie for his paines, at the modification of ſtipends: that all things maie be orderlie done in the church, peace & quietneſſe mainteined in the realme, and we deliuered from aparant plagues, and the bleſſings of God continued to the comfort of our poſteritie. And in the meane time his highneſſe inhibits & expreſſlie forbids vnder the paines conteined in his maieſties acts of parlement, & all other pains arbitrable at his maieſties ſight & councell, that no miniſter take in hand to aſſemble themſelues for the foreſaid cauſe, without the appointment and order taken by the ſaid biſhops or commiſſioners, whereby his highneſſe maie be certeinlie informed, that the foreſaid miniſters aſſemble not, to meddle with anie ciuill matters, or affaires of eſtate, as was accuſtomed before; but onelie to profit in the knowledge of the word, and to be comforted one by another in the adminiſtration of their ſpirituall office: which his highneſſe wiſheth them faithfullie to diſcharge, and then to call to God, that his maieſtie maie in a proſperous reigne enioie good and long life, and continue and increaſe in the feare of the almightie.

Beſides which, the king at the end of this his intention, did further articulate his intention into ſundrie heads as here followeth.

The kings intention drawne into certeine articles, and publiſhed in print.

His maieſties intention is, by the grace of God, to mainteine the true and ſincere profeſſion of the goſpell, and preaching thereof within his realme.

2 His maieſties intention is, to correct and puniſh ſuch as ſeditiouſlie abuſe the truth, and factiouſlie aplie or rather bewraie the text of the ſcripture to the diſquieting of the ſtate and diſturbing of the commonwealth, or imparing of his highneſſe and councels honour.

3 His maieſties intention is, if anie queſtion of faith and doctrine ariſe, to conuocate the moſt learned, godlie, wiſe, and experimented paſtors, that by conference of ſcriptures the veritie may be tried, and all hereſie and ſchiſme by that means expreſſed.

4 His maieſties intention is, that for the keeping of good order in euerie paroch, certeine ouerſeers to the good behauiour of the reſt, be appointed at the viſitation of the biſhop or viſitour, who ſhall haue his maieſties authoritie, and officers of armes concurring for the puniſhment of vice.

5 His maieſties intention is, to mainteine the exerciſe of prophetie for the increaſe and continuing of knowledge amongſt the miniſterie: in which a wiſe and a graue man ſelected by the biſhop or commiſſioner at the ſynodall aſſemblie, ſhall render accompt of the adminiſtration of thoſe bounds, where the exerciſe is holden, for which cauſe ſome reſpect of liuing ſhall be had vnto him, who ſuſteins that burthen.

6 His maieſties intention is, not to derogate from the ordinarie iudgement of matters of the church by the ordinarie biſhops, their councels and ſynods: but if anie of them doo amiſſe, and abuſe their calling, to take order for correcting, amending and puniſhing thereof.

7 His maieſties intention is, not to hinder or ſtaie anie godlie or ſolid order, grounded vpon the word of God, and order of the primitiue church, but that the miniſters of the word meddle themſelues onelie with their owne calling, and iudge not feareſullie of the eſtate.

8 It is his maieſties intention, that the preſbyteries conſiſting of manie miniſters and gentlemen, at Landwar or otherwaies, be not further tollerat in his realme: but the exerciſe of iuriſdiction of all churches to be in the hand of the biſhop or commiſſioner, and their councels and ſynods.

9 It is his maieſties intention, that the biſhops or commiſſioners aſſemble not anie generall aſſemblie out of the whole realme, without his maieſties knowledge and licence obteined therevnto: which vpon ſupplication his highneſſe will not denie, that an vniforme order may be obſerued in the whole realme, and the biſhops and their diligences there tried and examined, and the complaints of euerie particular heard and diſcuſſed.

10 It is his maieſties intention to aſſiſt this aſſemblie himſelfe, or by a noble man of his councell, his highneſſe deputie.

11 It is his maieſties intention, that when anie paroch findeth neceſſitie of anie faſt, they informe the occaſion to the biſhop or commiſſioner and their councell, that they may vnderſtand the cauſe to be lawfull; as likewiſe the biſhop of the dioceſſe finding lawfull occaſion, may within the ſame, with his councell preſcribe anie publike humiliation.

12 It his maieſties intention, that a generall faſt throughout the whole realme, ſhall not be proclamed but by his maieſties commandement, or by a generall councell, wherin his maieſtie or his highneſſe deputie is preſent.

13 It is his highneſſe intention, that the biſhops in the realme in euerie dioceſſe with their councell proceed into the eccleſiaſticall gouernement, but as is ſaid with a councell, that both tyrannie and confuſion may be auoided in the church.

14 It is his maieſties intention, that commiſſioners be directed vniuerſallie throughout the whole realme, to eſtabliſh a godlie order, and that his maieſties commiſſioners take order preſentlie for the tranſlation of ſuch miniſters, whoſe trauels they eſteeme may more conuenientlie and profitablie ſerue in an other place.

These things was the king ſaine to publiſh, to ſtaie the euill report of ſuch as went about to touch him for the breach of the chriſtian order in religion, which being nothing but that which ſeemeth anſwerable to naturall ſenſe & princelie maieſtie, ſhould neither by malice haue moued, nor for colour of religion procured anie beyond the warrant of the word of God, or the duetie of naturall allegiance to reſiſt the kinglie ordinance, or to lift vp their ſword or word againſt him, who being a god in earth, preſenteth the maieſtie of the God of heauen. But leauing the diſcourſe of theſe things to preachers, to whome it belongeth to inſtruct vs in our dutie to God, to our prince, & to our neighbours, we will turne againe to the other following occurrents of Scotland. And yet before we ſpeake anie thing of thoſe matters, ſith I haue in this place as well as in manie other ſpoken of parlements & acts of parlement, I thinke it not amiſſe to ſet downe ſomewhat collected out of authors touching their manner and order of parlement, and that the rather bicauſe the ſame conſiſteth of three eſtates, and the princes confirmation as our parlement doth, from whome it ſeemeth to me that they haue fet their light. Touching which, Leſleus in his Scotiſh hiſtorie lib. 1. pag. 75, vnder the title of Leges Scotorum, writeth in this ſort. Qui verò ſeculi negotijs ſeſe implicantes in eccleſiaſticorum album non referuntur, legibus, quas reges deſcripſerunt, aut regum voce confirmatas, tres regni ordines ſanxerũt, continentur, has partim Latino, partim Scotico ſermone confirmatas, regni municipales leges vocamus: libro qui leges Latinè ſcriptas continet, titulus (regiam maieſtatem) præfigitur, quòd ab illis vocibus libri exordium ducatur. Reliquis legum libris, comitiorũ (quæ populari ſermone parliamenta dicimus) acta inſcribuntur. Quanquam hic aduertendum, nos ita lege municipali teneri, vt ſi cauſa multis controuerſijs implicata (quod ſæpe fit) incidat quæ legibus noſtratibus non poſſit dirimi, ſtatim quicquid ad hanc controuerſiam decidendam neceſſarium cenſetur, ex ciuilibus Romanorum libris promatur. Sed ſi quis legum noſtrarum originem velit conquiſitè inueſtigare, intelligat poteſtatem has ferendi antiquandíque trium ordinum ſuffragijs liberè in publico latis regis aſſenſu confirmatis eſſe poſitam. On which parlements ſo aſſembled, conſiſting of the three eſtates, & the princes confirming voice (in the beginning whereof the king goeth to the place where that aſſemblie is made, to keepe ſuch parlement attired in his regall garments, with the ſword and other ornaments, the enſignes of his kingdome and kinglie authoritie, caried before him, attended on with all his nobilitie and cleargie) thoſe common people will manie times giue ſuch bie names as ſeemeth beſt liking to themſelues, and is moſt anſwerable to the nature & order of that parlement, as we alſo doo heere in England, whereof I could produce manie examples of both nations, which at this time I will forbeare, and onelie ſet downe one proofe (as well of England as Scotland) to confirme the ſame, leaſt in paſſing it ouer without ſome example thereof, I might make a vaine ſhew of knowledge conſiſting in naked words, without anie ſound matter. Wherefore I ſaie, that as in England in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand two hundred fiftie and eight, being the two and fortith yeare of the reigne of king Henrie the third, the parlement held at Oxford by the lords againſt the king, was called Parlamentum inſanum, becauſe manie things were there intreted which turned to the death of diuerſe noble men. So the Scots in like maner bynamed a parlement, in the yeare of Chriſt 1556, (being the fourteenth yeare of Marie the now impriſoned quéene of Scotland) and called the ſame a running parlement, becauſe there were manie intermiſſions and remœuings during the continuance therof, as appeareth by Leſleus in theſe words.

The running parlement.

Leſleus.

A eſtate ſequenti habita ſunt Edinburgi trium ordinum comitia, in quibus domini Brunſtonius, Grangius, Balnatius, & aly nonnulli, quorum bona à gubernatore publicata fuerunt, ſingulari regis Francia commendatione dignati, fama atque bonis reſtituti ſunt. Hac verò comitia, quod intermiſſa potius quàm omiſſa, quaſi continuarentur, nomen à vulgo acceperunt, vt currentia dicerentur. Thus much being ſaid about their parlements, let vs againe fall with our pen into the other matters of Scotland.

Caſtral. 443.

1585 About this time an ambaſſage was ſent out of England into Scotland, for the concluding of a peace betwéene both nations; the contents whereof, the king (opening vnto the lords and gentlemen aſſembled in parlement, and holden at ſaint Andrews) did vſe vnto them this ſpéech following.

The kings ſpeech to the eſtates, concerning a league in religion with England.

TWo cauſis my lordis and ze all of the eſtatis haue mœued me to ſend for zou at this time to craue zour aduiſes towardis them, quharof ſith the one is generall & the vther particular, I will begin at the generall as the matter of greateſt weight. Amongſt all the benefitis that God doth beſtow vpoun his elect and church, the triall and ſifting of the gud choſin from the bad hipocreitis, is ane of the maſt ſpeciall, quhich he hath vſed in all ages for the ſeparatioun of thame, alſwell for that to lang companie of the wicked doth corrupt the godlie, as alſo that their ſeparatioun is a taken in this earth, of Godis luue towardis them, quhich triall he doth now chéefelie vſe, for that the number of the wicked doth abound in theſe letter daeis, quherin God doth permit the diuell moſt to rage. For quhat greater trtall of the faithfull can there be, than the confederating togidder of all the baſtard chriſtians, I meane the papiſtis in a league quhich they terme holie, albeit moſt vnholie in varie truth, for the ſubuerſioun of the true religioun in all realmes throgh out the quhole varld. This is a matter ſo manifeſt and notorious to zou all, euen by the report of the ſmalleſt merchantis that trauaill, as it doth dilat the ſelfe, thought I were ſilent.

This leagues quhome of I ſpeake, are compoſed of Frenchmen and Hiſpaingnols, aſſiſted with the king of Spaines and the papes monie, ſolemlie ſworne to performe the forſaid enterpriſe before they leaue armes: the performance quhereof we aught to reſiſt for thrée cauſis (to wit) for conſcience, honor, and loue of ſelfis. For gif they maie atteine to their purpoſe (as God forbid) either will they deſtroie or rot out vs, our vifis and childrein, & quhatſoeuer we poſſeſſe, gif we remaine conſtant; either elſe muſt we render Chriſt Jeſus, and ſuffer our ſaulis which is the maſt nableſt part of man to be bund with the bundis of idolatrie, and our bodies to be vſed at their inordinat pleſuris. But ſith the loue of our ſelfis and our honour cannot permit the ane, and that our conſciencis and the reuerence we ow to God, cannot ſuffer the vther: I craue my lordis zour beſt & ſoundeſt opinionis and aduiſis quhat ze thinke meiteſt to be vſed for the remedie hereof. But gif ze deſire to firſt haue my opinioun, it is this in few woardis; that as ſundrie chriſtian princis haue alredie counſelled me, our contraleague ſalbe maid, not anelie in termis, but in effect holie, for the ioining togidder all true chriſtian princis to defend themſelfis, in caſe of vtheris inuaſioun. A thing hurtfull to none, profitable for ſelfis, acceptable to God, and vſe in the ſight of the varld. By this meanes ſall our conſciencis, honors, and lifis be preſeruid, and God and his religioun glorified and aduancid.

And ſith the quéene of England is not anlie a true chriſtian, but alſo nereſt ioinit to vs in nighbourhed, conſanguinitie and gudwill, I thinke it meiteſt in mine opinioun, that it be our league firſt and maiſt adſtrictlie mad with hir; for quhich cauſe I haue maid and ſet downe a forme of act to be ſubſcribit by zou all, quherein ze promis to ratifie and approue in parlement, quhatſoeuer articles I, or anie in my name ſall conclude with the quéene of England, or anie in hir name, for the making and effectualing of the foreſaid league. But for that the act it ſelfe will mare ample informe you, it ſalbe preſentlie read in all your audiencis.

Upon this ſpéech the lords being of diuerſe opinions, ſome willing to imbrace the league with England, and ſome deſirous to leaue it, and to ioine in amitie with France according to the moſt ancienteſt leagues, which haue béene eſtabliſhed betwéene them and the Scots by moſt of their former kings (whereof the firſt was Achaius, who entring league with Charles the great, had a token of confirmation thereof, which was the floure delices added to the arms of Scotland) there was nothing done in that conuention. After which, the baniſhed lords of Scotland remaining in England, entered their countrie: v. Caſtral. 445. and after ſome abode there made, vpon diuerſe méetings & conſultations, at laſt gathered their powers, and on the firſt of November they pitched their tents, placed there as it had béene a new towne, to the great terror of their enimies within Sterling: deliuering for the cauſe of their comming this proclamation following.

The proclamation publiſhed by the nobilitie of Scotland, conteining the cauſes of their repairing towards the towne of Sterling to the kings maieſtie, the ſecond daie of Nouember.

WHeras the kings maieſtie our ſouereignes good, naturall, and vertuous education is now plainelie vnderſtood to haue béene abuſed, and his roiall qualities giuen to him by the almightie God (which cauſed his fame far aboue the capatitie of his yeares to be magnified, and worthilie praiſed, to the great comfort of all his ſubiects) hath béene theſe yeares paſt obſcured by the craft & ſubtiltie of ſome lewd and wicked perſons of no deſert or worthineſſe, and for the moſt part of baſe linage, not borne to one foot breadth of land, yet of marueilous aſpiring wrongs and cruell inclination; who vnder colour of friendſhip and blond créeping in about his maieſtie, and ſéeking onelie their owne particular profit and promotion, ſhaking off (as it were) not onelie all chriſtian and charitable nature: but euen the generall points and offices of humanitie vſed amongſt moſt barbarous people, without feare of God or man, as ſubtill fores and bloudie wolues, by wreſting of lawes and other deceitfull practiſes, hath ſo waſted, torne in péeces, and deuoured the whole bodie of this afflicted commonwealth, that of the whole ancient forme of iuſtice and policie receiued of our anceſtors, remaineth nothing, neither in ſpirituall or temporall eſtate; ſtate; but the naked ſhadow & counterfeited maſke thereof to our ſouereignes high diſhonor, our opprobrie (who are a part of his nobilitie) and heauie greefe of all good men throughout the realme. It is euidentlie knowne what iuſtice and quietneſſe was in the realme, what heartie loue betwixt his maieſtie and his ſubiects, what beautifull countenance the church of God had, what dailie hope of increaſe, what expectation was of his highneſſe in forren nations, before the arriuall of Obegnie, afterwards called the duke of Leneux, and the entring in credit of Iames Steward, and coronell Steward with their vnhapie companies. But what hath ſucceeded ſince, no true Scotiſh hart can remember without extreame dolour: for there is no part or corner within the land at this time peaceable or quiet, but all repleniſhed with particular enimities, and cruell reuenges without puniſhment.

It is alſo well knowne, that whereas the wiſeſt of his maieſties moſt noble progenitors labored by clemencie, not by crueltie to poſſeſſe the hearts of their ſubiects, & to keepe the ſtrengths of their relms in their owne hands (thereby meaning the better to preſerue themſelues againſt ſuch inconueniences, as manie princes of that land miſgouerned, and led by peruerſe counſell haue béene ſubiect vnto) that the foreſaid abuſors had depriued his maieſtie both of the one and the other ſo far as in them laie. For the cheefe ſtrengths of the realme are in Arrane his hands, who bragging of his pedegree by deſcent from duke Mordacke (one that was beheaded for his treſon againſt his ſouereigne) was not aſhamed to ſaie (meaning of himſelfe) Here ſtands the perſon of king Iames the ſeuenth. And to the end that the hearts of the people might be alienated from his highneſſe, and ſo (as appeareth) his maieſtie made vnable to puniſh them, if at anie time hereafter he ſhould perceiue their falſe and treaſonable doings, what can be added more than theſe ſaid ſeditious hath alreadie done in that behalfe, ſeeing vnder his maieſties name and authoritie, ſuch parcialitie is vſed in all matters, ſuch extortion with crueltie, and incredible diſſimulation throughout the whole land, that were it not of his good ſubiects (vpon the experience of his mild & calme gouernement before theſe lewd men about him) clearelie vnderſtood that the cauſes of all theſe miſorders ought to be imputed vnto them, & not to himſelfe, they had long agone by vniuerſall male-contentment of the people (proceeding from the cauſes aforeſaid) procured a great diſtraction of the kings leeges hearts, and had caſt his maieſties honor, crowne, and eſtate in maruellous danger; whereas now (bleſſed be God) all his true ſubiects are certeinelie perſuaded, that if the ſaid lewd perſons could be ſeparated from his maieſtie, he would returne againe to exerciſe his former clemencie and towardnes in euerie reſpect, which hath béene theſe yeares paſt maruellouſlie eclipſed by the craft of thoſe treaſonable perſons aforeſaid, who not onelie haue ſought & ſeeke for their particular commoditie, the deſtruction of certeine ſeuerall perſons, but euen (as it appeareth) haue conſpired againſt the whole bodie of the realme, in ſo much as there is no eſtate of the land free from their perſecutions.

The worthieſt and moſt ancient of the barons and nobilitie (namelie ſuch as haue giuen beſt proofe of their forwardneſſe in true religion, and fidelitie to their ſouereigne) are by parcialitie, and wreſting of lawes, without mercie either executed, coſened, impriſoned, baniſhed, or at the leaſt debarred his maieſties preſence, againſt the miniſterie, ſchooles, and clergie, acts and proclamations publiſhed, inhibiting their preſbyteries, aſſemblies, and other exerciſes, priuileges, and immunities ratified by parliaments, proceedings, or at the leaſt by laudable cuſtome permitted euer ſince the firſt reformation of religion within this land; and without the which the puritie of doctrine, and right forme of the eccleſiaſticall diſcipline cannot long continue: as being the onelie meanes to trie & examine the liues, maners, and knowledge of euerie perſon, and to reforme the ſame if need require. With this the moſt learned, and of moſt vnſpotted liues of that number, are either compelled for ſafetie of their liues and conſciences to abandon their countrie, or elſe inhibited to preach, or depriued of their ſtipends. Ieſuits, ſeminarie prieſts, and ſuch as be knowne practiſers in diuers nations for the execution of the bloudie counſell of Trent are interteined, and in great eſtimation; yea ſome indurated papiſts in ſeſſion, to occupie the places from the which the moſt godlie & faithfull ſenators haue béene by them deiected. An euident preſage of the ouerthrow of true religion. And concerning the eſtate of burrowes, by intruſion of ſuch magiſtrats to rule aboue them, as neither are comburgeſſes, nor apt to diſcharge them ſelues of ſuch offices, but men elected to applauſe and to conſent to the appetite of the ſeditious aforeſaid, their priuileges & ancient liberties are ſo preiudiced, that without timelie remedie, that eſtate (ſometime a great ornament of the land) muſt needs ſuddenlie decaie. So as theſe three pillers (whereby the king & common wealth ſhould be preſerued & vpholden) being waſted & vndermined in maner aboue written, what can be expected but vniuerſall ruine and ouerthrow of the whole bodie of the eſtate; except God of his mercie preuent the ſame? Beſides all theſe, the foreſaid abuſors not reſting content with the enormities aboue expreſſed, haue practiſed, and dailie do practiſe to turne the happie amitie & loue, which now a good ſpace hath ſtood betwéene the inhabitants of the whole Ile in open hoſtilitie & hatred, without reſpect of neighborhood or kindred, ſtanding betwéene the two princes, or regard had to the benefits that hir maieſtie of England hath beſtowed vpon the king our ſouereigne, and his whole countrie, firſt by planting of true religion within this realme, and next by preſeruing his maieſtie, when as in his minoritie he could not take in hand or enterpriſe for himſelfe.

To this effect they openlie delt with ſuch perſons as by all meanes ſought hir maieſties deſtruction, as by the confeſſion of ſundrie hir maieſties rebels latelie executed in England is made manifeſt. But how ſoone they perceiued open danger to ariſe, by open dealing with hir enimies, then fraudfullie to illude hir maieſtie, they haue pretended theſe months paſt, in great friendſhip and kindneſſe, promiſing largelie in that behalfe, and offering to capitulat a bond offenſiue and defenſiue to ſtand perpetuallie. But in the end, notwithſtanding all theſe liberall promiſes, the effects by experience declare nothing to haue béene in their minds but falſhood & crueltie, as by the late murder of the lord Ruſſell is manifeſt to the whole world, who being a young noble man, for his birth and qualities verie honorable and vertuous, and of great expectation, & for his earneſt zeale to religion, and good affection to the king our ſouereigne, and to all Scotiſh men in generall, one that merited great praiſe, loue and commendation: yet he was murdered in moſt odious and treaſonable maner, euen when as greateſt kindnes and friendſhip was pretended; which cannot but produce maruellous ſuſpicion and ſlander, aſwell againſt the king our ſouereigne, as againſt the whole countrie, to his maieſties great diſhonor, and diſcredit of his innocent ſubiects, if condigne iuſtice be not miniſtred vpon the authors, and the executors of the horrible crime aforeſaid.

Laſt,

Laſt, which is moſt of all, and neceſſarilie craueth preſent reformation, the foreſaid abuſors couer all theſe enormities with his maieſties name and authoritie, thereby thinking to excuſe themſelues, and to laie the burden on him. And therefore, as it cannot be but verie ſlanderous and dangerous to his maieſtie, if ſuch licentious perſons (who hath alreadie made ſhipwracke of all honeſtie) be ſuffered to remaine in his companie: ſo is it ſhamefull to be reported in other nations, that ſuch a few number of beggerlie fellowes repleniſhed with all vice, ſhould extinguiſh the beautie of the nobilitie, haue empire ouer the whole countrie, and keepe his maieſtie thrall to authoriſe by his roiall power their abhominable and execrable facts. For the cauſes aforeſaid, and manie others that might be iuſtlie alleged, we of his maieſties nobilitie here preſent, in the feare of God and our ſouereignes obedience, being through Gods free mercie called to be profeſſors of the bleſſed euangell, and borne councellors to his highneſſe our ſouereigne, bound in dutie not onelie to hazzard, render and renounce our liues, lands, and goods (if need be) for the ſame euangell and true religion, but alſo in conſcience charged to be carefull of his maieſties welfare, honor, and reputation, and to procure to our abilitie, peace and quietneſſe to him and his realme, hauing our lands and heritages for that effect, holden of his maieſties moſt noble progenitors of worthie memorie.

In conſideration of which great enormities and tyrannies, hauing conuened our ſelues togither for redreſſe and reformation of the ſame, ſeeing the ſuffering thereof hath alreadie wounded the eſtate of true religion, diſhonored his maieſtie, diſturbed the whole realme, and had almoſt diſioined aſwell the hearts of the princes as of the ſubiects of the two nations: we thinke it therefore high time, and we are in dutie and conſcience (all doubt and perill ſet apart) to procure the ſeparation and thruſting awaie of the ſaid deſperat and enorme perſons from about his maieſtie, that his highneſſe being reſtored to his former libertie, maie freelie, peaceablie, and wiſelie gouerne his ſubiects and realme, by aduiſe of graue, modeſt, and indifferent councellors; onelie reſpecting his maieſties ſuertie and preſeruation, to the end that the afflicted church within this land maie be comforted, and all acts latelie made in preiudice of the ſame, maie be ſolemnelie cancelled, and for euer annulled, his maieſtie reſtored to his former libertie, the bodie of his commonwealth (by puniſhing of vice cheefelie vpon the authors of theſe late miſorders, and maintenance of vertue) maie be once diſburdened of the heauie oppreſſions and iniuries that they haue with no ſmall greefe ſo long ſuſteined, and the happie amitie with England reeſtabliſhed and conſerued, to the high glorie of God, honor of the king our ſouereigne, and vniuerſall contentment of all good men euerie where. In proſecution whereof, we proteſt before God and his holie angels, we ſhall neither ſpare our liues, lands, nor goods, but frankelie hazzard and expend the ſame as need craueth, vntill the ſaid abuſors be either apprehended or preſented to iuſtice, to ſuffer for their demerits; or elſe (if they cannot be found out) till they be debarred from his maieſties companie, and expelled the realme.

Wherefore we command and charge (in our ſouereigne lords name) all and ſundrie his ſubiects, as well to borrow as to land, to fortifie and aſſiſt this godlie enterpriſe, and to concurre with vs to that effect, as they will giue teſtimonie of their affection to the aduancement of true religion, his maieſties ſuertie and welfare, and the publike quietneſſe of the whole realme; certifieng all and ſundrie that doth attempt anie thing to the contrarie, or will not take one fold and plaine part with vs, we will repute them as partakers of all vice and iniquitie, aſſiſters of the treaſonable conſpirators aforeſaid, and enimies of true religion, to his maieſtie and his authoritie, and to the publike quietneſſe betwixt the two realmes, & will vſe them in bodies and goods accordingly. And that all iuſtices as well lords of ſeſſions as ſhirifs, commiſſioners, and other inferior iudges ſit and adminiſter iuſtice to the furtherance thereof, according to the laws of the realms, as they will anſwer vpon their allegiance and vttermoſt perill, with certification of the diſobeior, as is aforeſaid.

The aſſemblie of the nobilitie and the proclamation thus knowne, diuerſe matters paſſed betwixt the king and the lords, as petitions to and fro made and exhibited, with grants thereunto according: and to conclude, much congratulation was made for returne into their countrie of Scotland. In December there was a parlement called at Lithgo, at what time the earle of Arrane was diſplaced from his earledome, and (if I erre not) office of chancellorſhip: the remembrance whereof hath induced me to record ſome things touching ſome ſuch perſons as haue poſſeſſed that dignitie. v. Caſtrat. 448.

The names and times of certeine chancellors of Scotland, gathered out of the hiſtories of that nation.

William Wlod, biſhop of Dunblaine was chancellor to William king of Scots, which began his reigne in the yeare of Chriſt 1185, as ſome haue (but Leſleus, lib. 6. hath 1160, whoſe account herein is falſe) and continued in that office at the time of the death of the ſaid William, which fell in the yeare of Chriſt 1214. After whoſe death he was by Alexander the ſecond confirmed in the ſame place of chancellor. William Wlod.

John Lion chancellor of Scotland (in the time of Robert the ſecond of that name, and the firſt of the houſe of the Stewards which ware the crowne) was chancellor of Scotland, who being in great fauour with the ſaid Robert the ſecond, maried the ladie Eliſabeth daughter vnto the ſaid king, with whom he had in franke mariage diuerſe poſſeſſions called Glames, whereby he was called lord of Glames; of which Lion is that ſurname deſcended, who in memorie of that mariage beare in their armes the lions and lillies, with the treſſe in ſuch forme as the king of Scotland beareth the ſame, except that their lions be placed in a blacke field, as Holinſhed hath noted. Which Lion being chancellor was ſlaine in the yeare of our Lord 1380, being about the tenth yeare of the ſame Robert the ſecond, who after baniſhed the earle of Crawford. John Lion.

Gilbert Greenlaw biſhop of Aberden, being chancellor about the yeare of Chriſt 1411, in the vacancie of the kingdome, vnder duke Murdacke, betweene the death of Robert the ſecond (which fell in the yeare of Chriſt 1406, and the beginning of the reigne of James the firſt, in the yeare of our Lord 1426) was ſent ambaſſador into France with other noble men of Scotland. After which ambaſſage in France this Gilbert liued not verie long: for Henrie Lichton, who came ſhortlie in his place of the biſhoprike, was with other ſent ambaſſador into England, to fetch home James the firſt, and to inueſt him in the crowne of Scotland. Gilbert Greenlaw. v. Caſtrat. 449.

William Creichton knight, whom Leſle termeth the wiſeſt man that euer Scotland ſaw, being chancellor to James the firſt, was (in the yeare 1433, about the ninth yeare of the ſame king James) with the earle of Angus, and Adam Hepborne of Hales, ſent William Creichton.

sent to the castle of Dunbar, with letters signed with the kings hand, directed to the kæpers of the castle to deliuer the same to the bringers thereof: which the kæpers of that castle durst not disobeie, but permitted them to enter accordinglie. After this in the yeare of Christ one thousand foure hundred thirtie fiue, & the eleuenth of the same king, he was sent ambassador into Denmarke, where he concluded a sound peace betwéene the nations of Denmarke and Scotland; which good seruice being well weied, he was after the death of James the first, and in the entrance of James the second into the gouernment of Scotland, in the yeare of our Lord 1436, confirmed in his office of chancellorship, beside which he had the gouernment of the kings person, and of the castle of Edenburgh committed to his charge. Then by reason of contention which fell betwæne sir Alexander Leuingston the gouernour of the realme and this chancellor, they fell to parts taking in the yeare of Christ one thousand foure hundred thirtie and seuen, whereby insued much mischéefe and bloudshed in the realme (as alwaies by my obseruation I haue found to happen during the minoritie and the insufficiencie of kings) at what time the quæne taking part with the gouernor against the chancellor, found means by subtiltie to get the king into hir possession out of the hands of the chancellor, after that she had handsomelie trussed vp the king in a tronke like a fardell full of apparell, whereupon the gouernour besieged the chancellor in the castell of Edenburgh, but in the end they agréed that Creichton should still kæpe the castle of Edenburgh and his office of chancellor.

James the second.

That done, in the yeare one thousand foure hundred thirtie and nine, and the third yeare of James the second, the chancellor obteined to haue the quéen Dowager, and hir husband James Steward lord of Lorne released out of the prison of Sterling, whither they were committed by the gouernor. Which done, the chancellor kæping in mind the deceit of the quæne, in ouerreaching him by getting the king out of his possession, and seeing the gouernor to take the whole authoritie on him at his pleasure, did so worke, that he found meanes that he onelie accompanied with foure & twentie persons, did againe get the king (as he was one morning hunting in Sterling parke) into his possession, whom he carried with him into the castle of Edenburgh, wherwith the gouernor was græuouslie displeased: but not able to remedie the same, there was an agréement made betwæne the chancellor & him, that the king should remaine in the custodie of the chancellor, and the gouernor continue his office in administrating the affaires of the realme. Whereupon in the yeare of Christ one thousand foure hundred and fortie, and the fourth yeare of James the second, the gouernor and the chancellor assemble a councell of the nobilitie at Edenburgh. In the yeare of Christ one thousand foure hundred fortie and foure, being the eight of the same James the second, both the gouernor and the chancellor (at the persuasion of William earle Dowglas) were remoued from their offices by the king, who being now about foureteen yeres old, had taken the absolute gouernement of the kingdome vpon him: besides which they were also put from the councell, their friends were banished the court, and they were summoned to appeare before the king, which they refused, not as giltie in conscience, but as fearing the crueltie of their enimies, whereupon they were proclamed rebels and put to the horne, which occasioned William Dowglasse the chancellors great enimie to gather a power and spoile the lands of this William Creichton, for requit all whereof, Creichton gathered a like power, entred the land of Dowglasse, and spoiled the same all that he could, which thing adding further heat to the Dowglasse, caused him to procure the king in the yéere of Christ one thousand foure hundred fortie and fiue, being the ninth yéere of the kings reigne, to demand of Creichton the deliuerie of the castles of Edenburgh and of Creichton, which he denieng to do vntill the king came to full age, had all his goods confiscat, hauing therein no iniurie done vnto him, for as saith Lesleus: Primus omnium sanciuerat Creichtonus, vt qui regi castrum aliquod postulanti restiterit, violatæ maiestatis arcessatur, cuius ille legis pœnam primus subijt, as he did which deuised Phalaris bull. But after, when the king had besieged Edenburgh castle nine moneths, Creichton being therein, the same was deliuered with condition, that Creichton should still remaine chancellor, which obteined, he neuer after delt in affairs of the common welth, whereby growing againe into the kings fauour, he was with others in the yéere of Christ one thousand foure hundred fortie & fiue, being the tenth of James the second, sent ambassador to the duke of Gelderland to obteine Marie the dukes daughter to wife for the king, which he brought to passe. All which notwithstanding, in the yeare following he fell againe into the princes disgrace, and was by parlement holden in the yere of Christ one thousand foure hundred fortie and seuen, forfalted, for that his seruants would not deliuer Creichtons house or castle to the king, as before you haue heard. But after as it séemeth, such is the mutabilitie of fortune, he returned into the kings grace, for which in the yeare of Christ one thousand foure hundred and fiftie, he was by the earle Dowglasse (supposing him to be the cause that the king misliked the earle) assaulted one morning as he was comming out of the castle of Edenburgh, from which although wounded, he escaped vnto his castle of Creichton, where in short space after he assembled a power, recouered Edenburgh from the Dowglasse, and had destroied the earle at that present, if he had not shifted awaie more spédilie: who being thus dishonorablie chased from Edenburgh, drew the erle of Crawford and Rosse to ioine with him against Creichton, but he little estæming thereof and requiting good for euill, did in the yeare of Christ one thousand foure hundred fiftie and three, or a thousand foure hundred fiftie and foure as some haue, procure a pardon for the earle of Crawford, græuouslie fallen into the kings displeasure. In which yeare also the king calling a parlement at Edenburgh, the earledome of Murreie was giuen to sir James Creichton, or rather restored to him, from whome it had béene wrongfullie taken by the vniust sentence of William earle of Dowglasse, who had procured it to be assigned to his brother Archibald Dowglasse, although the right remained in the same sir James Creichton. But yet when the same sir James could not kæpe that earledome without the enuie of diuers persons, he surrendred the same into the kings hands. Beside all which at this parlement was George Creichton created earle of Cathnesse, which I thought good to note in this place, because it touched the name of Creichton, whereof I do now intreat by reason of this chancellor.

Lesleus lib. 8. pag. 297.

Andrew Steward lord of Anandale was chancellor of Scotland in the yere of Christ one thousand foure hundred three score and eight, being about the eight yeare of the reigne of king James the third, & was sent with others into Norweie to conclude a mariage with the king of Denmarke, betwæne his daughter Margaret & the king of Scots, which ladie he brought with him into Scotland in Julie, at what time they were married accordinglie. Some yeares after which, that is about the yeare of Christ one one thouſand foure hundred foure ſcore and two, and the two and twentith of James the third, when Alexander Steward Duke of Albanie with the duke of Glocester were come vnto Kaikaig with the Engliſh power, this man amongſt others, was ſent to the Engliſh campe to treat with the two dukes, with whom in the end an agreement was made. By which the duke of Albanie, before fled out of Scotland, was reſtored home, and had both honors and offices beſtowed on him; who with this chancellor & other noble men had the gouernment of the kingdome for a certeine ſpace: during which time, this duke the chancellor and others, going to viſit the quæne at Sterling, the duke by the quænes perſuaſion without knowledge of the other, went to Edenburgh, and by force reſtored the king to libertie, before taken and kept in hold by ſome of the nobilitie, which being knowne to the chancellor and the other lords at Sterling, they fled to their owne countries.

James Beton archbiſhop of Glaſcow was chancellor in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand five hundred & thirtæne, being the firſt yeare of king James the fift. This man being of great wiſdome, was appointed amongſt others to aſſiſt the quæne in the gouernment of the realme, wherevnto ſhe was for a time aduanced: but the woman not enduring to be directed by others, taking quarell againſt the biſhop, did immediatlie after the mariage, performed the firt of Auguſt, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand five hundred and fouretæne, betweene hir and Archibald Dowglaſſe earle of Angus (which this biſhop incountred as much as he could) take the great ſeale from the ſaid biſhop of Glaſcow, at ſaint Johns towne, wher vpon the biſhop got him to Edenburgh, and aſſiſted with manie lords, kept the quæne and hir husband out of that towne, whereby great diſſention and part taking was raiſed amongſt the nobilitie of the realme. But as I gather, peace being made betweene them, he was againe made chancellor. After this, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand five hundred and fiftæne, he commeth with the earle of Arrane, who ſubmitteth himſelfe to the gouernor. Shortlie following, the gouernor gaue to this archbiſhop of Glaſcow the abbeie of Arbroth, aſſigning to the earle of Murreis a large penſion out of the ſame, which biſhop being thus in fauor with the gouernor, was (in the yere of Chriſt one thouſand five hundred and ſeuentæne in Maie, when the gouernor went into France) apointed, amongſt others, to haue the rule of the realme vntill his returne. Two yeares after which, the nobilitie being diuided about the quarell of the earle of Angus & Arrane, this biſhop in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand five hundred and ninetæne, being then alſo chancellor, with other noble men of the realme, kept the towne of Glaſcow; but after that, this chancellor who would not come to Edenburgh, the king of England and of France their ambaſſadors came to Sterling, where a peace was proclamed amongſt the nobilitie.

James Beton.

But what can long continue in one ſtaie, or what peace will be long imbraced amongſt ambitious minds? ſith in the yeare following, being the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand five hundred and twentie, the noble men fell againe to factions: for when diuerſe of the peeres were come to Edenburgh to aid the earle of Angus againſt the earle of Arrane (this chancellor remaining then in the towne) they purſued the earle and chancellor ſo hotlie, that they were both conſtreined to forſake the towne, and to flie through the north Loch, about the thirtith daie of Aprill. But as the euents of quarels be doubtfull, now vp now downe, ſo this archbiſhop not long after this diſgrace, recouered breath, and in Nouember following, did accompanie the regent come out of France to Edenburgh, where was a parlement holden, to ſummon the earle of Angus to appeare; but he refuſing, it was agreed that the earle ſhould paſſe into England there to remaine.

The biſhop thus hauing the better of his enimies, Andrew Forman biſhop of S. Andrews died, in the yeare one thouſand five hundred twentie and two, being about the ninth yeare of James the firſt, by occaſion whereof, this chancellor James Beton biſhop of Glaſcow was aduanced to that ſee, and further made abbat of Dumfermling. Vpon which new honor, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand five hundred twentie and foure, he was appointed one of the gouernors of the realme by parlement: but he not poſſeſſing this honor anie long time, the earle of Angus (who had gotten the king into his vſurped gouernment, and denied the deliuerie of the king, being ſent for by this biſhop and the other nobilitie) ſent to the chancellor for the great ſeale, which was deliuered to the meſſengers: vpon which, this biſhop not forgetting the ſame, haſtened the ſentence of diuorce ſued before him, betweene the quæne and the earle of Angus. Whereof the earle, to reuenge the ſame, did with the king, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand five hundred twentie and ſir, ſeeke for the quæne and the biſhop of ſaint Andrews: but becauſe they were kept ſecretlie in their friends houſes (ſo that they could not be heard of) he ſpoiled the abbeie of Dumfermling, and the caſtell of ſaint Andrews, taking awaie all that the archbiſhop had. Notwithſtanding which, the archbiſhop keeping in fauor with the old quæne and the yong king, did in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand five hundred twentie and nine, and the ſirtæenth yeare of James the fift, chriſten James the kings ſonne borne at ſaint Andrews, and not long after, ſurrendered his ſoule to God in the ſaid yeare one thouſand five hundred thirtie and nine: of whome it ſhall not greeue me to ſet downe what Leſleus hath written, which though it be ſomewhat long, yet becauſe it is neceſſarie, I had rather ſet downe the plaine words of the author, than by abridging of them into our our tong, to depriue the author of his due by his owne ſtile: thus therefore he writeth.

Iacobus Betonius archiepiſcopus Santandreapolitanus, qui maximis reipublicæ honoribus ſummáque gloria apud nos quàm diutiſſimè floruerat, ætate iam grandior, naturæ concedebat, ac in æde ſancti Andreæ tumulo honorificè tegebatur. Hic antiſtes quoſdam, quos egregiè charos habuit, viuus conſtituebat, vt in beneficia ſibi mortuo ſufficerẽtur. In epiſcopatum autem Santandreapolitanum, ac in abbathiam Arbrothenſem, vir ſumma prudentia, & animi magnitudine præſtans Dauid Betonius cardinalis, eius ex fratre nepos, in abbathiam verò Dumfirmlingenſem Georgius Dureus, in alia denique alij: quam illius voluntatem rex non impediuit, quo minùs illi, quos archiepiſcopus ante obitum conſtituerat, beneficijs liberè fruerentur: ne cuius viui mentem ſemper laudaret, eius mortui voluntatem malitioſè videretur reſcidiſſe. Hic archiepiſcopus præcipuum illius collegij quod nouum Santandreapoli dicitur, partim ſuo ſumptu excitauit, ac maximam pecuniæ vim qua reliqua pars inchoata perpoliretur, teſtato reliquit: verùm pecunia illa in alios vſus poſtea traducta, collegij ius (ne quid acriùs dicam) perierat. Thus much Leſle, and thus much I, touching this chancellor, ſpoken of alſo in my treatiſe of the archbiſhops of ſant Andrews.

Leſleus lib. 9. pag. 450.

Gawen Dunbar archbiſhop of Glaſcow, and the kings ſchoolemaiſter, was chancellor as appeareth by Leſleus lib. 9. pag. 399. who in in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand five hundred twentie and two, writeth: Non multò poſt Andreas Formannus epiſcopus copus Santandreapolitanus vitâ ceſſit, huius quàm primũ honore ac titulo inſigniebatur Iacobus Betonus archiepiſcopus Glaſcuenſis, qui quidem archiepiſcopatus omniũ ſumma voluntate ceſſit præſtãtiſſimo cuidam viro Gawino Dunbarro; cui quòd reconditæ eruditionis, ſinceri vitæ conſilijque grauiſſimi laudibus præſtiterit, regis tenella ætas moribus doctrináque informanda credebatur, quem intimis ſenſibus ita dilexit rex, vt ſui intimi concilij ſocium, regníque cancellarium poſtea illum coaptáuerat.

Dauid Beton (the brothers ſonne of James Beton deceaſed archbiſhop of ſaint Andrews) was chancellor of Scotland, who being abbat of Arbroth, was with others ſent ambaſſador into France in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred thirtie and foure, being the one and twentith yeare of the gouernment of James the fift, for to procure the earle of Vandoſmes ſiſter in mariage for the king; but the ſame toke not effect, becauſe the king going in perſon into France liked hir not. About three yeares after, which was in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred thirtie and ſeuen, and the foure and twentith yeare of James the fift, this Dauid was aduanced to the honor of a cardinall, of which title I do not at this time remember, that euer I haue read ante other to haue inioied but Walter Wardlaw, of whome Onuphrius thus writeth:

Two cardinals oneli in Scotland.

Walterus epiſcopus Glaſcuenſis presbyter cardinalis creatus, anno Domini 1383, 10 kalend. Ianua. 6 pontificatus Clemẽtis 7, obijt inter annum 1400, & 1409, whome the Scotiſh hiſtories make cardinall somewhat before in the yeare one thouſand three hundred fourſcore and two, about the eleuenth yeare of Robert the ſecond (at what time with others he was ſent to Charles king of France as ambaſſador to renew the league betweene France & Scotland) by Paul the third, then pope of Rome, to whom alſo the king of France gaue in commendam the biſhoprike of Miropen: of the making of which Beton cardinall, thus the ſame Onuphrius writeth: Dauid de ſancto Andrea Scotus npiſcopus Miropienſis presbyter cardinalis tituli ſancti Stephani in Cælio monte creatus, anno Domini, 1538, 13 kalend. Ianuar. per Paulum tertiũ; anno pontificatus 13. In which words Onuphrius, and Leſleus following him, refer the creation of this cardinall vnto the yeare one thouſand fiue hundred thirtie and eight, though others attribute it to the yeare one thouſand fiue hundred thirtie and ſeuen. In which yeare one thouſand fiue hundred thirtie and eight, he was with others ſent ambaſſador into France after the death of the quéene, to procure Marie of Lorreine widow ducheſſe of Longuile, and daughter to the duke of Guiſe, to be giuen to king James in mariage; which matter he brought to his deſired effect.

The nert yeare after, being the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred thirtie and nine, as you haue heard before, he was by his vncle James Beton archbiſhop of ſainct Andrews, & abbat of Arbroth, appointed to ſuccéd in the ſame biſhops ſée and abbeie, which he inioied accordinglie: who aduanced with theſe dignities, did after the death of James the fift, falling in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred foortie and two, labor by policies and other extraordinarie deuiſes to be gouernor of the realme, during the minoritie of the yong quéene; but he was diſappointed thereof by the nobilitie, who choſe the earle of Arrane to that function; by meanes whereof, there fell continuall diſſentions betweene the nobilitie, which ended not vntill this cardinall was ſlaine as after it ſhall apeare. For shortlie after in the ſaid yeare one thouſand fiue hundred foortie and two, being committed to ward (in the caſtle of Dalketh vnder the cuſtodie of the lord Seton, smallie fauoring the French faction) becauſe he would haue perſuaded the nobilitie to forſake the motion of the K. of England, determining to marie his ſon prince Edward to the yong quéene of Scots. But the cardinall did not long remaine there; for by the gouernors appointment he was remoued to his owne caſtell of S. Andrews, hauing watch and ward about him, to ſee him ſafelie kept, in which place alſo he did not long continue: for corrupting his kæpers he found meanes to eſcape; which done, in the yeare one thouſand fiue hundred foortie and three, he came to the coronation of the yong quéene, and shortlie after perſuaded the earle of Arrane the gouernor to leaue the part of the king of England, and wholie to become French.

Now at the coronation, the cardinall ordered all things, appointing euerie officer, and growing into great credit, did in like ſort at other times diſpoſe of the common-wealth as ſéemed beſt liking vnto him. Whereupon, the earle of Leneur taking part with the Engliſh, oppoſed himſelfe againſt the gouernor and the cardinall, whereby followed sharpe warres, the cardinall ſtill ſupporting and counſelling the gouernor: which troubles being somewhat abated, by reaſon the earle of Leneur was gone into England, the cardinall in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred foortie and foure, receiued the patriarch of Jeruſalem arriued in Scotland. In which meane time, there was great contention betwéene the cardinall and the archbiſhop of Glaſcow, for bearing their croſſes in the others iuriſdiction: whereupon they fell from words to ſwords, which the gouernor appeaſed: that done, the patriarch the popes legat comming to Rome, procured the legantine power to be granted to this cardinall, which he long inioied not. For being greatlie enuied by reaſon of theſe honors & some grœuous facts, certeine perſons in the yeare one thouſand fiue hundred foortie and ſix (after that he had burned George Wiſchart a learned man, condemned at ſaint Andrews by an aſſemblie of biſhops) did the thirtéene daie of Maie (when they had ſecretlie in the morning entered the caſtell of ſaint Andrews where the cardinall was) expell the porters of the foreſaid caſtell, the cardinals ſeruants, and ſlue the cardinall naked as he came to méete them, whoſe death ſir James Liermount prouoſt of ſaint Andrews thought to haue ſtaied by aſſembling a power therefore: but after that he ſaw the cardinals dead bodie hanged out ouer the wals, he made no further attempt. The death of which cardinall comming to the gouernors eares, he baniſhed the author thereof, as writeth Leſleus in theſe words: Gubernator, quòd nec cognato ſuo ſanguinis coniunctio, nec cardinali dignitas, nec cancellario maieſtas ac domus propria, ad impiorum inſidias effugendas quicquam profuerit, ægerrimè ferre. Conſilio itaque Huntlei ac Argadij ſuaſu indicto, in cædis auctores capitis proſcriptioniſque ſententia data eſt.

Leſleus lib. 10. pag. 482.

George Gordon earle of Huntleie, ſonne of John Gordon, being chancellor of Scotland, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred foortie and ſeauen, falling about the fift yeare of the reigne of Marie quéen of Scots, was taken priſoner by the Engliſh at Muſkelborow field, who pitieng the miſerie of diuerſe of his countriemen, wounded and taken at the ſame battell, did vndertake for their ranſome; whereupon they were permitted to depart, and left to ſhift for themſelues as well as they might. In the nert yeare, which was the yeare of Chriſt (as hath Leſleus one thouſand fiue hundred foortie and eight) the protector of Scotland ſent Carnegie knight and senator to the protector of England, to ranſome Huntleie, or at the leaſt to obteine that his wife might wiſe might come vnto him. Whereupon the earle was with his keepers permitted to come to Moꝛphet, where expecting his wife, he thought vpon his eſcape, and from thenſe after ſupper, deceiuing his warders, he fled by night into Scotland, through the aid of one Geoꝛge Carre his deere friend, who pꝛouided him ſpeedie hoꝛſes therefoꝛe. The earle being thus come into Scotland, was ioifullie interteined of the queene, the gouernoꝛ, and the other nobilitie; but chiefelie of his wife, whoſe earneſt deſire to ſee him was the occaſion of his eſcape. But as all ioie hath ſome hard hap foꝛ the moſt part attending vpon the ſame; ſo this earle did after feele the foꝛce of like miſfoꝛtune. Foꝛ about ſeuen yeares after, in the yeare of Chꝛiſt one thouſand fiue hundꝛed fiftie and foure, he was againe committed to pꝛiſon as after ſhall appeare. Befoꝛe which, in the yeare of Chꝛiſt one thouſand fiue hundꝛed and fiftie, he with other noble men goeth into France with the queene mother of Scotland; but before that iourney, whileſt he was pꝛeparing foꝛ the ſame, he commanded William Mackintoſch chiefe of the Glenchattins to be executed at Strathbolgie, foꝛ a pꝛiuie conſpiracie made againſt him, being the kings lieutenant in the noꝛth parts. Which thing raiſed a great commotion like to haue ſucceeded to great ſlaughters (in that the earle of Caſſels and manie others fauoꝛed Mackintoſch) if the wiſdome of the queene mother had not appeaſed the ſame.

After that the queene mother had bin in France, ſhe in the ſame yeare of Chꝛiſt one thouſand fiue hundꝛed and fiftie, returned into Scotland through England; but the earle Huntleie warlie fearing to fall into the dangers of the Engliſh (whome he thought would not foꝛget his eſcape from them, returned by ſea into his owne countrie: after which, when he had beene about foure yeares in Scotland, the queene mother regent in the yeare of Chꝛiſt one thouſand fiue hundꝛed fiftie and foure, ſent this earle Huntleie into Heitland to take Iohn Mudꝛad: but returning without him, he was committed to pꝛiſon in Edenburgh the eleuenth of October: at what time the regent changed all the officers, toke awaie the great ſeale from this earle Huntleie the chancelloꝛ, and gaue it to monſieur Rubie a Frenchman, which monſieur Rubie thus made keeper of the great ſeale in the ſaid yeare of Chꝛiſt one thouſand fiue hundꝛed fiftie and foure, and the twelfth yeare of Marie queene of Scots, had the vſe of the ſame ſeale in the place of the earle Huntleie then chancelloꝛ in ward. But the earle of Huntleie after being ſet at libertie, it ſeemeth that he was ſtill chancelloꝛ. Foꝛ beſides that Leſleus ſaith that he was reſtoꝛed to all his dignities (except the earldome of Murreie, whereof he had a gift of inheritance, the earldome of Marre, the farmes of Oꝛkeneie & Heitland, and the queenes land at Straitſdie, all which he gaue foꝛ his libertie) he is alſo by the Scotiſh hiſtoꝛies named ſtill chancelloꝛ, in the yeare of Chꝛiſt one thouſand fiue hundꝛed threeſcoꝛe and one, and the nineténth yeare of queene Marie, being then by the nobilitie amongſt other, choſen to be of the pꝛiuie councell. Of whome befoꝛe this alſo Leſleus wꝛiteth, that in the yeare of Chꝛiſt one thouſand fiue hundꝛed fiftie and nine, the queene hauing receiued a bill of ſupplication from the pꝛoteſtants: Illa hunc protinus libellum ſupplicem per Huntleum regni cancellarium ſynodo exhibendum, vt de illis definiret, reddidit.

Monſieur Rubie keper of the great ſeale.

After this, in the yeare of Chꝛiſt one thouſand fiue hundꝛed threeſcoꝛe and two, in October being the twentith yeare of the ſame queene, he was in the faction betweene him and others (foꝛ diuerſe miſdemeanoꝛs alſo, vpon his comming with an armie to Coꝛnethie in Mar) ſlaine, and Iohn Goꝛdon his ſonne taken pꝛiſoner, bꝛought to Aberdine the nine and twentith of October, and there beheaded. Now foꝛ the other chancelloꝛs which followed in ſucceſſion of time, becauſe they fall yet freſh in memoꝛie, and ſome mention is made of them in this my continuation of theſe annals; I doo not intend to make anie double recitall of them in that place, being a thing ſuperfluous ſo to doo; & therefoꝛe, & becauſe Omne nimium vertitur in vitium (whereto the lawiers agree ſaieng, that Fruſtra fit per plura quod fieri poteſt per pauciora) I will referre thee foꝛ the ſupplement of this title of the chancelloꝛs, to the ſame continuation of my annals, there at thy pleaſure to collect and diſpoſe them, as beſt ſhall ſerue thine owne memoꝛie oꝛ knowledge.

Wherefoꝛe leauing them, and returning to the conſideration of other things, which following time hath begotten and bꝛought foꝛth in Scotland: we ſaie, that as the queene of England had befoꝛe time, after the taking of Sterling, ſent maiſter Knolles into Scotland to vnderſtand the eſtate of theſe times: ſo in like ſoꝛt the Scots with like congratulation, diſpatched a meſſenger vnto the queene of England, by whome ſhe might haue knowledge of ſuch things as were after done. Foꝛ maiſter William Keith one of the chamber to the king, was ſent from the king of Scots to the queene of England in the ſame moneth of December, a little befoꝛe Chꝛiſtmas with letters, who comming to the court then remaining at Greenewich, did there make deliuerie of the ſame letters. During whoſe abode here in England, ſome of thoſe which had befoꝛe aſſiſted the earles of Angus and Marre, againſt ſuch as ſeemed to nouriſh the king in the Romane religion, fell from their foꝛmer opinion, & either foꝛ loue to the ſame Romane religion, oꝛ foꝛ malice to other of the nobilitie, oꝛ foꝛ a deſire to be ſingular to themſelues, imbꝛaced the aboliſhed doctrine of the pope, & ſet vp the ceremonie of Italie. Amongſt whome, one, not of the meaneſt, the loꝛd Marwell, who had maried the earle of Angus his ſiſter, did in Januarie aduance the ſame, and heard maſſe at Lincloudon a mile from Dumfries, contrarie to the publike lawes appointed in Scotland. Wheꝛof intelligence being bꝛought vnto the king, he foꝛthwith diſpatched a meſſenger vnto him, commanding him to ſurceaſe the ſame. But the loꝛd Marwell perſiſting in that his foꝛmer action, was (in the end apꝛehended, and vpon the refuſall of an oth touching the ſame, accoꝛding to the lawes of Scotland) committed to pꝛiſon in Edenburgh, where he long remained.

William Keith ſent into England.

The loꝛd Marweil heareth maſſe.

Theſe things thus done in Scotland, the afoꝛenamed maiſter Keith departed from London towards that countrie, about the foure and twentith of Januarie, with anſwer that hir maieſtie of England would ſhoꝛtlie ſend an ambaſſadoꝛ into Scotland, who ſhould fullie ſatiſfie the king in all things, and farther deliuer vnto him the full of hir maieſties determination. Whereupon Thomas Randolph eſquier, a perſon who had manie times befoꝛe executed that function in thoſe countries, and was well acquainted both with the ſtate & maners of the people, was by the queene of England diſpatched into thoſe parts; who being ſo authoꝛiſed, toke his iourneie from London towards Scotland on the eight date of Febꝛuarie. After which, in Apꝛill following, maiſter Archibald Dowglaſſe (one that had beene ſometime of the ſeſſion oꝛ parlement of Edenburgh) hauing remained ſome yeares here in England, vpon diſpleaſures which the king of Scots conceiued againſt him, did make his returne into his owne countrie, where he behaued himſelfe ſo wiſelie, that he obteined great fauor after his returne home. In this yeare, the preſbyterie (as they had manie times done before, but eſpeciallie in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred foureſcore and three, which I thought to note in this place, becauſe I would not often vſe repetition of one thing done at ſeuerall times in ſo manie places) did excommunicat their metropolitan the archbiſhop of S. Andrews, and the reſt of the biſhops alſo, becauſe they would not in all their actions, ſupport and confirme the doctrine which the preſbyterie had eſtabliſhed. Which excommunication the preſbyterie did the more boldlie, becauſe they were ſupported by the aſſiſtance of the maiſter of Lindſeie, a great enimie to this Patrike Adamſon biſhop of ſaint Andrews.

But the king in the beginning did aſſiſt him againſt them, and the archbiſhop did in like ſort thunder an excommunication againſt them. Which diuiſion not being méete to be in the cleargie, who ought to be (as the apoſtles were) of one hart, and of one mind, will in the end as Chriſt ſaith, bring the ſame realme to confuſion: for Omne regnum in ſe diuiſum deſolabitur: which muſt néedes be, where euerie man will be a lord, & that the inferior of the clergie will neither acknowledge nor obeis anie ſuperiors. In which place, ſith I haue mentioned Patrike Adamſon the archbiſhop of ſaint Andrews, becauſe I ſhall not haue occaſion to ſpeake anie more of him, I will here ſet downe a collection of all the archbiſhops of that ſée.

A Cathalog of the archbiſhops of ſaint Andrews, collected out of the hiſtories of Scotland.

THe Scots ſéeking meanes to rid themſelues from ſubiection of the biſhop of Yorke, who was the metropolitane of Scotland, did in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred threeſcore and foureténe obteine of the pope that they might haue a metropolitane ſée within themſelues, by reaſon of the continuall wars which was betwéene the two nations; during which they could neither vſe apellations to their metropolitane, nor haue other biſhops conſecrated. Whereupon the pope erected the church of S. Andrews into an archbiſhoprike in the time of king James the third, touching which, thus writeth Leſleus, lib. 8. pag. 317. Hoc anno (which was the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred threeſcore and fourténe) Patricius Grahamus ſedis Andreapolitanæ eccleſiæ epiſcopus, crebris litteris ac nuntijs a papa efflagitauit, vt metropolitana poteſtas in diui Andreæ ciuitate figeretur: iniquũ eſſe enim contendit, vt Scoti ab Eboracenſi epiſcopo tanquam primate pẽderent, cùm propter crebra bella (quibus ſe Scoti & Angli mutuò laceſſunt) Scotis ad illum non pateretur tutus acceſſus, nec liberum ius, præſertim in appellationibus. Annuit ſummus pontifex, vt Andreapolitano deinceps epiſcopo poteſtas metropolitana incumbat. Dies indulto pontifici promulgandi menſe Septembri dicta eſt, atque maxima populi nobiliúmque lætitia celebrata. Epiſcopi reliqui Grahami odio flagrantes, illius authoritatem repudiant, regiſque animum ingenti pecunia (which was as other authors ſaie, eleuen thouſand marks) occupant, ne Grahami partibus ſtuderet. Interea præſules Romã mittunt qui ſui defenſionem contra Grahamum ſuſcipiunt. But in the end they did not preuaile. Graham was made archbiſhop.

Patrike Graham being biſhop of ſaint Andrews and the firſt archbiſhop of that ſée, was after his aduancement to that title deprriued in this ſort. In the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred threé ſcore and seuenténe, pope Sixtus the fourth of that name ſent a legat called Huſman into Scotland, which ſhould diſplace this Patrike the archbiſhop of ſaint Andrews, condemned by the ſentence of the pope and the cardinals for an heretike, ſchiſmatike, ſimoniake, wherupon he was depriued of all eccleſiaſticall dignitie, and commanded to perpetuall priſon; in whoſe place was William Schewes choſen, to whoſe cuſtodie and diſpoſition this Patrike was committed, after which Graham being remoued for his ſafe impriſonment firſt to ſaint Colms Ile, then to Dumfermeling, and laſtlie to Locheleuine, there in the end he died, and was buried in ſaint Sarffis or Seruinianus Ile in Locheleuine after that he had béene three yeares archbiſhop. Leſleus. lib. 8. pag. 318.

William Schewes being created archbiſhop of ſaint Andrews in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred threéſcore and eighténe as ſome haue, or one thouſand foure hundred threéſcore and nineténe as others haue, in the Holie rood houſe in Edenburgh, in the preſence of king James and manie of the nobilitie receiued the pall, as the enſigne of his metropolitane power, being declared legat and primat of Scotland, at what time he was not withſtood by anie of the other biſhops, who being eſtranged from ſhewing anie fauor to Graham, did often infringe his authoritie, and in the end expelled the ſame Graham from his archiepiſcopall ſée. After which in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred foureſcore & two, this archbiſhop Schewes fled into his owne countrie, and after at the requeſt of the king reſigned his archbiſhoprike, contenting himſelfe with the biſhoprike of Murrie. William Schewes.

Andrew Steward vncle to king James the third was vpon the reſignation of William Schewes made archbiſhop of ſaint Andrews, after which in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred foure ſcore and foure the king ſent this archbiſhop ambaſſador to Rome for the obteining of certeine priuileges, which he brought to effect. In the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foure hundred foureſcore and eleuen, in the time of king James the fourth, about the third yeare of his reigne was great contention betwéene the archbiſhops of ſaint Andrews and Glaſcow, touching both their authorities: which when it had drawen manie of the nobilitie into diuers factions, it was ceaſed by the king for a certeine time, vntill all doubt thereof might be taken awaie, by deciding the ſame by the canon law before eccleſiaſticall iudges. Then in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred and ſeuen, being about the ninetéenth yeare of James the fourth, the biſhop of ſaint Andrews with the earle of Arrane were ſent ambaſſadors into France. Andrew Steward. Leſleus. 1483

Alexander Steward baſtard ſonne to king James the fourth, was made archbiſhop of ſaint Andrews in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred and ten, about the two and twentith of the reigne of the ſame James the fourth: this man hauing long ſtudied with Eraſmus in Germanie, and in the low countries was aduanced to this ſée of the archbiſhoprike when he was yet in Flanders; who hauing intelligence thereof by his frends, came forthwith into Scotland, where he was ioifullie receiued by the king, the nobilitie, & his kindred. He was ſlaine togither with his father king James the fourth at Floden field, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred and thirténe. After which, John Hepburne prior of ſaint Andrews ſtronglie beſieging the caſtle of ſaint Andrews, forced the ſame to be yéelded vnto him. The cauſe of which beſiege grew, that Hepburne being choſen biſhop of ſaint Andrews by his canons of that church (whereunto the whole nobilitie Alexander Steward. Leſleus. lib. 8. pag. 353.

were

were helpers) was hindered to poſſeſſe that archbiſhoprike, by ſuch ſtipendarie people of Gawine Dowglaſſe as kept the caſtle; wherevpon the quæne and the earle of Angus, after that they vnderſtood how the caſtle was by force come into the hands of Hepburne, did take in euill part that he who was ſo troubleſome vnto them, ſhould aſcend to ſo high a dignitie, and that Gawine Dowglaſſe ſo déerelie to them beloued, and to whom they had giuen that biſhoprike ſhould be helpleſſe of the recouerie therof. Wherevpon the quæne and the duke of Albanie diligentlie labored by ambaſſadors ſent to Rome, that a third perſon (ſith Gawine Dowglaſſe could not obteine it) might be aduanced therevnto, which third man was Andrew Forman biſhop of Murrie: further requiring therewithall that he might be abbat of Dumfermling, & Aberbroth, which in the end with much intreatie they obteined of the pope.

Leſl. pag. 373.

Andrew Forman.

Andrew Forman biſhop of Murrie was at Edenburgh by the popes buls on the eighth kalends of Januarie in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred and fiftéene (being about the ſecond yeare of the reigne of James the fift) declared archbiſhop of S. Andrews, and abbat of Dumfermeling and Aberbroth. Wherevpon the prior of ſaint Andrews before named, ſtill contending that he was archbiſhop, both in reſpect of the election of the couent, and the conſent of the nobilitie, did labor all he could againſt Forman, appealing him to Rome, for which cauſe he with the lord Hales and other his frends came to Edenburgh to defend the matter, at what time the lord Hume chamberlaine of Scotland and ſuch others as openlie aſſiſted Forman, did oppoſe themſelues againſt the prior, which nobilitie (becauſe they were great in the court) did the more moleſt and hinder Hepburne, ſhortlie after by publike edict (and proclamation of the king) baniſhing the prior & his followers. Hepburne being ſtriken with the ſharpnes of that precept, did priuilie depart the towne, and the prior went to Rome, hoping by the popes authoritie to wreſt from Forman the archbiſhoprike, which he could not obteine by violence. But how he ſped at Rome I do not know, for I onelie find this, that in the yeare following, being the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred and ſixtéene, about the third yeare of the ſame James the fift, that the gouernor perceiuing that all theſe contentions, hatreds, and diuiſions of the nobilitie did ariſe by theſe braules, which were betweene Forman and Hepburne for the ſée of ſaint Andrews, deſired to cure this gréeuous wound made in the commonwealth. Wherefore he perſuaded Andrew Forman that he ſhould reſigne all his eccleſiaſticall benefices into his hands in an open aſſemblie at Edenburgh, for by that meanes the gouernour thought that he might pacifie the minds of the nobilitie, and vtterlie root out thoſe breaches of diſſention. Wherevpon there was a daie appointed to the nobilitie to aſſemble: at what time Andrew Forman frælie reſigned to the gouernor the duke of Albanie all his eccleſiaſticall promotion, to be diſpoſed at the dukes pleaſure. In conſideration thereof, the duke beſtowed the archbiſhoprike of ſaint Andrews and the abbeie of Dumfermling vpon the ſame Andrew Forman, and gaue the biſhoprike of Murrie to James Hepburne (greatlie fauored of the earle Bothwell and the competitor of Forman) being therevnto ſubſtitute by John Hepburne prior of ſaint Andrews in place of the ſaid John, to whom moreouer the duke appointed a yerelie penſion of a thouſand marks, to be paied by the ſame Forman out of the abbeie of Dumfermling. After which, about ſix yeares or somewhat leſſe, this Forman departed his life, being in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred twentie and two, and the ninth yeare of king James the fift, to whom ſucceeded James Beton.

James Beton.

James Beton archbiſhop of Glaſcow and chancellor of Scotland, was made archbiſhop of ſaint Andrews (as is before touched) after the death of Andrew Forman, hauing therewith the abbeie of Dumfermling, as his predeceſſor before had poſſeſſed it, of whom ſée more in my diſcourſe of the chancellors of Scotland.

Dauid Beton.

Dauid Beton brother to the ſame James Beton was after the death of the laſt archbiſhop of ſaint Andrews named to that ſée by his brother before his death, which place he poſſeſſed accordinglie, after the death of the ſame James Beton. Of this man being a cardinall I haue ſpoken more liberallie in my diſcourſe of the chancellors of Scotland.

John Hamilton.

John Hamilton (brother to the gouernour) being abbat of Paſlate, was by the ſame gouernour in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred fortie and ſir, being about the fourth yeare of Marie quæne of Scots made archbiſhop of S. Andrews, after that he had returned out of France (where he aplied his ſtudie) in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred fortie & thrée, being the firſt or ſecond of quæne Marie of Scotland. This man comming out of France, paſſed through England, and hauing other learned men in his companie, did viſit the king of England, of whome he was moſt honourablie and courteouſlie receiued. From whenſe going into Scotland he was made treaſuror, which office he kept as long as his brother was gouernour, whome he did further in all good counſels at home, and ſaue & defend in the wars abroad. Then in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and nine, being the ſeauentéenth of quæne Marie, he was with the quæne beſieged in Leith. After ſtill following the quænes part, he with others méeteth hir in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred ſirtie and ſir, at Muſkelborow, and ſo attendeth on hir, who not long after in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fiue hundred ſeuentie & one, being about the fourth yeare of James the firt, was taken in the caſtell of Dunbritaine, and ſent priſoner into Sterling, where being examined by the regent Matthew earle of Leneux, about the murther of Henrie king of Scots, ſonne to the ſaid Matthew, he was there drawne, hanged, and quartered, being the firſt archbiſhop that I haue yet heard of that ſuffered ſo ignominious a death.

Patrike Adamſon.

Patrike Adamſon alias Conſtance ſucceéded John Hamilton in the archbiſhoprike of ſaint Andrews, who poſſeſſing this place at this daie, and hauing occaſioned me to ſpeake of him in ſeuerall places in this my continuance of the annales of Scotland, is héere to be ouerpaſſed, and therefore I referre thée to the ſame annales, if thou deſire to know what I haue ſaid of him. ¶ Thus knitting vp the catalog of the archbiſhops of S. Andrews, we ſaie that as you haue heard before, that in Februarie laſt Thomas Randolph eſquier was ſent ambaſſador from the quæne of England into Scotland, ſo he ſtill remaining there a long time in that countrie diſpatcht his ambaſſage to good effect. During whoſe aboade there, there was an aſſemblie holden at Edenborough in Maie, wherein theſe things which follow were concluded vpon for the eſtabliſhing and order of the ſame commonwealth.

The articles concluded in the aſſemblie holden at Edenburgh in Maie.

FIrſt, the whole realme was diuided into 52 preſbyteries, & the number of miniſters and churches appointed to euerie preſbyterie.

2 That there shall be two prouinciall assemblies in the yeare in euerie prouince, the first tuesdaie of October and Aprill.

3 There shall be one generall assemblie in the yeare, the first of October next insuing.

4 All assemblies do consist of these persons, the pastor, doctor, and elders, & all the three to haue votes, as well in the presbyteries prouinciall as generall assemblies: and that all such as haue anie suites in the assemblies may see and here, but giue no vote except they be of the number of the three afore specified.

5 That there was onelie foure offices in the church, the pastor, doctor, elder and deacon, and that the name of bishop was onlie proper to the pastor or minister, and that he had especiall charge and function in the church, but no greater than a common pastor.

6 Item, that visitation in the church was lawfull, and at this time necessarie, in respect of the eldership as yet is not lawfullie planted, and that this visitation did apperteine onelie to a pastor or pastors sent from the assemblie, and not else.

7 That when euer the assemblie maketh mention of a bishop, they meane onelie S. Paules bishop and none other.

8 That the receiuing of presentations, giuing of collations, triall of ministers, deposing them for iust causes, shall be in the power of the most learned and soundest iudgement of two presbyteries, and this to stand vntill the presbyteries be better erected.

9 That a commissioner appointed by the generall assemblie, being a pastor, as pastor shall be tried and censured in life and doctrine by the presbyterie, or prouinciall assemblie, but in respect of his commission, he shall be tried by the generall assemblie, of whome he receiued the same.

10 If he admit or do any thing without consent of his assemblie, it shall be of no effect, and a iust cause of his deposition.

11 The power which he shall receiue shall be Ordinis causa non iurisdictionis.

12 Commission appointed by the prouinciall or generall assemblies to visit, shall visit presbyteries or particular churches, alwaies not preiudging the power of the presbyterie within the bounds of their visitation.

13 The visitors appointed by the generall assemblie for this present to stand for one yeare, and thereafter as the assemblie shall appoint.

14 That no commission giuen by anie in times past before the date of this assemblie shall be vaileable, but such onlie as the said assemblie shall appoint. In which assemblie also it seemeth that the kings maiestie made certeine requests, to haue somewhat established concerning the bishop of saint Andrews, whereupon these things were concluded against him, and he brought to subscribe the same, to the preiudice of his metropolitane iurisdiction ouer the rest of the clergie of his crowne.

The meanes taken in this generall assemblie, touching the bishop of S. Andrews, at the desire of the kings maiestie.

IF the bishop by his owne handwriting or personall appearance in the assemblie, will in Gods presence denie, that euer he publikelie professed or meant in anie sort to claime a supremasie, or to be iudge ouer other persons and ministers, or euer auowed the same to haue a ground in Gods word: and that if he had so done, it had beene great error and against his conscience and knowledge.

2 If he will denie, that in the last synodall assemblie he claimed to be iudge thereunto, and that if he had done it, that he erred in it, and in his impious behauiour or contempt of the said synod and his brethren, in that he will remit him to the brethren present, and craue pardon for the ouersight therof, and promise good behauiour in the time to come.

3 If he will promise to claime no further than he iustlie may by God his word, and according to the last conference, and endeuour himselfe in all behauiour to shew himselfe in all time to come a moderat person, and so serue, as that he may proue agreeable for a bishop prescribed by S. Paule, and so submit his life and doctrine to the iudgement and censure of the generall assemblie without anie reclamation, prouocation, or appellation from the same in anie time to insue.

These things being demanded at the archbishops hands, he was contented to yeeld to them by subscribing his name with his owne hand thereunto, which done, the said assemblie at Edenburgh did for their part in like sort publish their dutifull mind & obedience to his maiestie, in annulling the processe of excommunication against the said bishop of saint Andrews, and to continue him in his former estate, as followeth.

The decree of the assemblie at Edenburgh, concerning the restitution of the bishop of S. Andrews.

FOr his maiesties satisfaction, and to giue testimonie with what good will we would obeie his heires so farre as we ought, or in conscience we may, and for good hope we haue in his maiesties fauourable concurrence in building vp of the house of God within this realme, and bicause the processe of excommunication was laid, and the sentence pronounced during the time of the conference, whereupon his maiestie hath taken occasion of offense, which for manie good causes were conuenient to be remoued, we will forbeare to examine the said processe, or decide it, whatsoeuer prouocation or appellation, or to call in doubt the legalitie or forme of the said processe, or to condemne the said synod. Yet for the respects afore said, and vpon good and weightie considerations, we hold the said processe and sentence as vnlaied, vndeducted or pronounced, and restore the said bishops in all respects so farre as may concerne the said processe and sentence of excommunication in the former estate he was immediatlie before the same, like as no processe nor sentence had been laid and deducted against him. Prouiding alwaies he obserue what hath beene promised by him in the premisses, & behaue himselfe dutifullie in his vocation in all times comming.

This done the earle of Rutland (hauing a commission directed to him, to William lord Euers, and to the same Thomas Randolph) went to Berwike as hir maiesties ambassadours, to confirme that league betweene the two nations of England and Scotland, which the said Randolph had before concluded. Whereupon the commissioners of England, the earle of Rutland, and the lord Euers, from out of England, and Thomas Randolph from out of Scotland, came to Berwike the place appointed where this league should be fullie stablished. For the meeting of whome at the same place, were commissioners of like number, and equall honor and authoritie, appointed to come to Berwike for Scotland. But some delaie being made of their appearance, and manie excuses therewith to interteine time by messengers vsed, at the length commeth to Berwike Francis earle Bothwell, Robert lord Boid, and and ſir James Hume of Colden Knowles knight and baron, commiſſioners for the king of Scots, who there meeting with the foreſaid commiſſioners of England, did conclude a league defenſiue and ofenſiue betweene theſe two nations: which done, the earle of Rutland returned home, and maiſter Randolph departed againe into Scotland to take his leaue of the king, whome when he had ſaluted he left, and returning into England came to London about the fifteenth of Auguſt, where I will now leaue him. But before I turne my pen to any of the perſons of Scotland, I determine to ſet downe certeine verſes which Buchanan dedicated vnto him. For although they be matter impertinent to this hiſtorie of Scotland, yet bicauſe they were written to him (here mentioned) by a Scot, and are meet for the inſtructions of the yong Scotiſh king, I will not refuſe to ſet them downe in this ſort as followeth:

Sæpe tibi Randolphe iubes me pingere regem,
Qualem optem, tribuat ſic mihi vota Deus.
Accipe: ſit primùm veræ pietatis amator,
Effigiem ſummi ſe putet eſſe Dei,
Pacem amet: & ſi res poſcat, ſit ad arma paratus,
Exuat in victos arma, odiúmque ſimul,
Nolo nimis parcus, nimiùm ſit nolo benignus,
Vtráque regno æqua eſt exitioſa lues,
Non ſibi ſed populo ſeſe putet eſſe creatum,
Et ſe communem ciuibus eſſe patrem:
Puniat inuitus, cùm res iubet eſſe ſeuerum,
Publica cùm poſcent commoda lenis erit.
Viuat, vt exemplar populo ſit recta ſequendi,
Sit vultus prauis terror, amórque bonis,
Excolat impenſe ingenium, corpúſque modeſtè,
Luxuriem frænet cum ratione pudor:
Iam tacitus tecum, tentas me fallere, tanquam
In tabula noſtram qui mihi pingit heram.

During the time of the abode of this Randolph in Scotland, there was an ambaſſador ſent from the king of France to the king of Scots, which ambaſſador being called monſieur D'annauall had at this time ſmall interteinment in Scotland; where not ſtaieng long after that Randolph was come into England, he alſo came hither out of Scotland, to the end to paſſe through this countrie into France. This ſummer Montgomerie erle of Eglinton, whoſe father died not manie yeares before, hauing married the daughter of the lord Boid was ſlaine in this ſort. The earle being a goodlie yong gentleman, and like to proue a good member of his countrie, as manie of his anceſtors had done before, did for his delight ride forth on hunting (a warlike exerciſe, & much vſed by the Scots) about fiue or ſix miles frõ his owne caſtell, where hauing ſatiſfied his pleaſure, he returned home. But hauing wait laid for him by an ambuſh of his enimies, he was in his iorneie towards his caſtell intercepted by the lord of Glencarns brother, with the lards of Hacket and Robertſlands, and ſome of the ſurnames of the Muirs; at what time he was moſt miſerablie ſlaine by them to their great diſhonor, and his countries diſcommoditie. After which, in September Archibald Dowglaſſe (who as you heard before departing this realme in Aprill laſt, was admitted to come into his owne countrie) was ſent ambaſſador from the king of Scots to the quéene of England; in whoſe companie were attendant on him William Purro one of the kings chamber, and Richard Dowglaſſe nephue vnto the ſame Archibald. Which ambaſſador after his comming into England, had full audience at the court then remaining at Windſore, on the firſt of the ſame moneth of September, with whome remaining ſtill here in England, at the writing hereof, expecting the end of his ambaſſage; I will ſet end to this ſlender diſcourſe. Thus hauing patched vp a Rapſodie of ſome few things done in Scotland ſince the yeare of our Lord one thouſand fiue hundred ſeuentie and one, in which I began my annals of that countrie ſo nakedlie deliuered by me, I determine to knit vp all whatſoeuer is ſet downe before, with a catalog of ſuch writers of Scotland, as either by mine owne ſearch in hiſtories, or by others intelligence by conference haue come vnto my hand. The which I haue bene the willinger to do, becauſe I would obſerue that courſe in Scotland which I haue done in my additions to the hiſtorie of England, firſt written by Raphaell Holinſhed. For hauing there cloſed vp that hiſtorie with a generall catalog of all ſuch as haue written anie thing concerning England, ſo will I wrap vp theſe annals of Scotland, much after that manner, with a generall diſcourſe of the writers of that countrie. In doing whereof I haue not refuſed to follow the order of Leſleus and other hiſtoriographers of Scotland, obſerning the like courſe in the repetition of the names of a few perſons at the end of moſt of their kings.

A generall catalog of the writers of Scotland, with the times in which they liued, as well of the yeare of Chriſt, as of the reigne of Scotiſh kings.

Before I enter into the diſcourſe thereof (which I ſpeake not by waie of impeaching anie glorie of the Scotiſh nation) I muſt deliuer the opinion which I conceiue of ſome of the Scotiſh writers, ſet downe by manie of their hiſtoriographers, who (ſauing correction) finding manie learned writers to be termed Scots, do tranſferre them to all their owne countrie of Scotland. But in that they ſeeme vnto me (holding the ſame for this preſent vntill I may ſee good authoritie to diſproue it) to be ouer couetous in taking from other that which is their due. For I do verelie ſuppoſe, that manie of thoſe men ſo termed Scots were Iriſhmen borne. For vntill late yeres a little before the conqueſt (if my memorie faile me not) the Iriſhmen were called Scoti or Scots; whereupon it is, that the Scots and Iriſhmen at this daie now knowne by ſeuerall names, do chalenge Duns, Columbanus, and others to be borne amongſt them, ſome calling them Scots, and other naming them Iriſhmen, and rebuking the Scots for chalenging thoſe men vnto them. For although the Scots came out of Ireland, and the Iriſh were called Scots, it is no reaſon to call a Scot borne in Ireland, by the name of a Scot borne in Scotland, as ſome writers do vnder the amphibologicall name of Scot. But I (whoſe determination is not to aduance the one, or derogat from the other) will onlie in this place ſet them downe as I find them, & ſhew the different opinions touching the ſame, ſtill leauing it to the iudgement of others, to thinke thereof as they pleaſe; for I neither may nor will ſit as Honorarius arbiter betweene thoſe two nations. Wherefore thus I enter into the catalog of the writers of Scotland as followeth.

Fergus. Fergus the firſt of that name king of Scots, who died, as hath Geſnerus out of Bale, in the yeere of the world three thouſand ſix hundred ſeuentie and eight, and two hundred ninetie and two before the birth of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, but Leſleus ſaith three hundred and fiue before Chriſt, did write Leges politicas lib. 1. This man the Iriſh make to be there borne amongſt them; for thus writeth Stanihurſt in his writers of Ireland: Fergus ſonne to Fegus dus king of Ireland, the firſt king of Scots, whome ſome affirme to be borne in Denmarke, the more part ſuppoſe to haue bẽne an Iriſhman, was in the fiue and twentith yeare of his reigne by miſfortune drowned neere a rocke in the north part of Ireland, that of him at this daie is called Caerfergus. Vpon whoſe miſhap theſe verſes following were made:

Icarus Icareis vt nomina fecerat vndis,
Fergusius petræ ſic dedit apta ſuæ.

Iosina. Iosina, the ninth king of Scots, after Fergusius the firſt, who floriſhed in the yeare of the world, as hath Geſnerus, three thouſand eight hundred twentie and ſix, before the birth of Chriſt one hundred thirtie and ſeuen, as the ſame author ſaith, but one hundred three ſcore and one as hath Leſleus lib. 2. pag. 89 did write De viribus herbarum lib. 1.

Ethodius. Ethodius the firſt of that name king of Scots, who (delighting in muſike) was in the yeare of Chriſt one hundred ninetie and foure, and the third yeare of his reigne, as hath Leſleus, but one hundred ninetie and ſix, as hath Geſnerus, ſlaine by a muſician of the Hebrides, did write Ad Pictorum regem plures epiſtolas.

Celius Sedulius. Celius Sedulius a Scot by birth, as hath Geſnerus, which floriſhed about the yeare of Grace foure hundred and thirtie, in the reigns of Fergusius the ſecond, and Eugenius the ſecond, kings of Scots, who being a companion to Hildebert a learned biſhop of the Scots, did after the death of Hildebert for further learning trauell into Spaine, France, Italie, Greece, and Aſia, as hath Leſleus lib. 4. pag. 134. whome the pope Gelaſius wondering at his vertue and writing was wont to call Venerabilem, or worthie reuerence, as our Engliſh Bede is accuſtomed to be termed. This Sedulius did write Carmen paſchale lib. 4. which books are intituled Libri mirabilium diuinorum. Beſides, he penned Annotationes in omnes Pauli epiſtolas, printed at Baſill by Henrie Peter, Hymnum de ſeruatore. Ad Theodoſium Cæſarem lib. 1. In æditionem Donati lib. 1. In Priſciani volumen lib. 1. Exhortatorium ad fideles lib 1. De Chriſto lib. 2. with diuerſe other verſes and epiſtles.

Merlinus Caledonius. Merlinus Caledonius otherwiſe called Merlinus Sylueſtris, or Wlandiſh (a different perſon from him which is called Merlinus Ambroſius Britannus) was borne in the borders of Scotland, and the ſcholer of the Britiſh prophet Teleſinus. This Merline Calidon executed manie prodigies or ſtrange things againſt the Engliſh Saxons, which man floriſhing about the yeare of Chriſt fiue hundred and ſeuentie, did write De vaticinijs lib. 1. in which he intreated of matter belonging to hiſtorie.

Columbanus. Columbanus, whome Geſnerus, Bede, and the Iriſh hiſtories affirme to be an Iriſhman borne in Ulſter, but Sixtus Senenſis in his Bibliotheca ſancta, Leſleus, & the Scotiſh & Engliſhmen name to be of other nations, as of Scotland and England, was a monke & father of manie monaſteries, being Abbas Luxurienſis, as hath Geſnerus, Sixtus Senenſis, and Leſle, being a place in Burgundie, which abbeie he built (by the permiſſion of Theodoricus the king) together with the abbeie of Fountneſſe in France. This man at the firſt held the feaſt of Eaſter contrarie to the weſt church, but in th'end was reduced thereunto. He went into Almanie now Germanie, where he left ſaint Gall, and after paſſed into Italie, where he liued a moſt holie life in the monaſterie of Bobiens, or (as hath Marianus) of Bouiens, which he built for a perpetuall monument of his liberalitie, and died in the ſame on the twentith daie of Nouember. He floriſhed in the time of Conballus king of Scots, about the yeare of our redemption fiue hundred ninetie and eight, and left theſe books to poſteritie, Commentaria in totum pſalterium lib. 1. Epiſtolarum lib. 1. Monaſteriorum methodos lib. 1. Aduerſus Theodoricum regem adulterum lib. 1. De moribus monachorum metricè lib. 1. Collationes ad monachos lib. 1.

Briget. Briget, a moſt holie woman, whome the Iriſh affirme to be borne in Limſter, but Geſnerus and Leſle with the Scots do affirme hir to be borne a Scot, being by Geſner called Brigida Laginenſis, ſhe became religious, and was veiled by the biſhop of Man, as hath Leſleus lib. 4. pag. 149. ſhe floriſhed about the yeare of our Lord fiue hundred three ſcore and eight, as hath Leſleus, in the reigne of Conballus king of Scots; ſome other ſaie ſhe floriſhed in the yeare fiue hundred and ten, Geſnerus in the yeare of Chriſt fiue hundred and eightene, and wrote twelue books of reuelations verie darke and full of myſteries, which books Leſleus will not haue to be written by this Briget a Scotiſh woman, but by Briget called Brigita Suetica that floriſhed manie yeres after this Scotiſh Briget, writing thus: Impetrè tamen hanc noſtram cum Brigita Suetica, cuius nomine reuelationes multæ inſcribuntur, quidam cõfundũt: ſiquidẽ multis ſæculis hanc Brigita noſtra fuiſſe poſteriorem ſatis conſtat. Tanta veneratione Scoti, Picti, Britanni, Angli & Hibernenſes diuam Brigitam ſunt vbique proſecuti, vt plura templa Deo in illius memoriam apud illos omnes erecta videas, quàm in vllius cæterorum diuorum omnium. Illius ſanctum corpus Hibernici, Duni, quo loco ſancti Patricij illorum apoſtoli corpus ſeruatur ſe habere contendunt. Noſtri eandem gloriam ſibi vendicant, qui idipſum in canonicorum collegio Abrenethi rectè ſe colere hactenùs putantur, &c. Touching which I haue read theſe old verſes, by which the Iriſhmen chalenge hir with Columbanus and Patricius to be buried in Ireland, which verſes are thus:

Hi tres in Duno tumulo tumulantur in vno,
Brigita Patricius, atque Columba pius.

Maidulphus or Maidaldus Scotus, as Geſnerus termeth him, did flouriſh in the yeare of our Lord ſix hundred foure ſcore and nine, he writ De Paſchatis obſeruatione, whom I take to be Maidulphus, who was notablie learned in the Greeke and Latine, firſt a ſchoolemaſter, and after abbat of Malmſburie called in the beginning Maidulphi curia, or Maidulphſburie, after the name of this Maidulphus, who as hath Leſleus lib. 4. pag. 137. did flouriſh in the yeare of Chriſt ſeuen hundred and ſirteene. Now it is certeine both by our and the Scotiſh chronicles, that Maidulphus the builder of Malmſburie monaſterie was a Scot.

Kilianus a Scot being a monke, was martyred in Germanie about the yeare of our Lord ſix hundred three ſcore and nine, as hath Geſnerus out of Bale, but Leſleus affirmeth him to liue in the gouernment of Ethſinus, which died in the yeare of our Lord ſeuen hundred three ſcore and two, being the thirtith yere of his reigne. This Kilianus did write Contra peregrinos cultus, lib. 1. Geſner alſo out of Mat. Dreſſerus nameth Lecturã Kiliani ſuper magiſtrũ ſententiarum, which peraduenture might be this Kilianus the Scot.

Ionas Monachus being borne in Scotland, and the diſciple of the abbat Columbanus, flouriſhed in the yeare of Chriſt ſix hundred and thirtie, as hath Geſnerus, he writ Vitam ſancti Columbani lib. 1. Vitam ſancti Euſtacij abbatis lib. 1.

Adamannus Coludius, being a Scot as hath Geſner out of Bale, was a monke of the apoſtolicall order, and moderator, ruler, or abbat of the monaſterie in the Ile of Hua, who flouriſhed in the yeare of Chriſt ſix hundred foure ſcore and nineteene, and writ De locis terræ ſanctæ lib. 1. De ſitu Ieruſalem lib. 1. De paſcheta legitimo lib. 1. Epiſtolas multas. From this mans works Bede affirmeth that he had had manie things which he inſerted in his owne bookes. But I much doubt whether this Adamannus were a Scot, in that he is called Adamannus Coludius, that is Adam of Coludi, which Coludi is a place in Yorkeſhire belonging to the biſhoprike of Yorke, and now at this daie is in Engliſh called Calwod.

Florentius (whom Scotland brought forth flouriſhed in the yeare of Chriſt ſix hundred foure ſcore and eight, in which yeare Eugenius the firſt king of Scots began his reigne) was, as hath Leſleus, noblie borne, who trauelling into ſtrange countries, conuerted manie from paganiſme vnto Chriſt, leading a moſt auſtere life in the ſolitarie woods, not far from Bruichius the famous riuer in Alſatia, and built a monaſterie for ſuch religious perſons as came to him out of Scotland, being after the death of Rotharius by the Argentines made their biſhop. He was buried in that monaſterie before named, builded for his Scots. This man I take to be the ſame man of whom thus writeth Geſnerus: Florentius Voluſenus Scotus ſcripſit theologicã orationẽ ſiue cõmendationem piam & eruditam, Griphius excudit Lugduni 1539. Idem de animi trãquillitate carmen ibidem excuſum 1543. & Baſiliæ apud Ioannẽ Oporinum cum pijs aliquot poetis an. 1551, Idem edidit aphoriſmos beatæ vitæ & dialogum de animi tranquillitate, which maie be the booke of that matter before mentioned.

Artuillus. Artuillus, or Artullis a worthie gentleman, the ſonne of a moſt noble perſon borne in Scotland, flouriſhed, as hath Geſnerus out of Bale, in the yeare of Chriſt ſeuen hundred and ten, but Leſleus appointeth him to haue liued in the time of Eugenius the eight of that name king of Scotland, who as he further ſaith, began his reigne in the yeare of Chriſt ſeuen hundred three ſcore and two, this Artuillus writ De rebus mathematicis librũ vnũ, ad Adelmum epiſcopum lib. 1.

Sedulius Iunior. Sedulius Iunior being biſhop of the ſouth Scots did write Statuta concilij Romæ ad ſanctum Petrum habiti, and liued in the yere of Chriſt ſeuen hundred and foureteene.

Bonifacius. Bonifacius, as hath Marianus Scotus by the witneſſe of Leſleus lib. 4. pag. 166, being of the Scotiſh bloud, went to Rome, from whenſe by pope Gregorie the ſecond he was ſent into Germanie to conuert them to the faith, where he was made the firſt archbiſhop of Mentz, being called the Germane apoſtle, after which he was the popes legat and ſent into France: In qua (as ſaith Leſle) Thuringis, Heſſis, & Auſtraſionibus ad rectam religionis viam traductis, meſſem longè copioſiſſimam collegerat; after which he went againe into Germanie, & from thenſe into Friſia, where he was martyred in the yere of Chriſt ſeuen hundred fiftie and fiue, who being a monke of the order of ſaint Benet, did write; Epiſtolarum ad diuerſos lib. 1. Vitam quorundam ſanctorum lib. 1.

Ioannes Mailroſe. Ioannes Mailroſe whom Geſnerus maketh mention to be all one with Ioannes Scotus, being the companion of Alcuinus, in the time of Charles the great: this man being skilfull in all diuine knowledges, liued in the time of Donald the firſt of that name king of Scotland, as ſaith Leſleus biſhop of Roſſe, and alſo floriſhed in the time of Gregorie king of Scots, in the yeare of Chriſt eight hundred foureſcore and twelue. This Ioannes Scotus after many yeares ſpent at Athens in the Greeke letters, was called into France by Lodouike emperor of the Romans, who beſides other monuments of his learning, at the commandement of the ſaid emperor, did turne the Hierarchie of ſaint Denis into Latine, beſides the commentaries of Hugo de ſancto Victore, a moſt notable diuine. Shortlie after which, the ſaid John was ſent by Charles the great into England, to Alured, or Alfred the king thereof, to congratulat ſo worthie a prince for the victories which he had of the Danes: who after that he had ſetled a perfect league betweene the French and the Scots, remained in England continuallie, interteined by Alured, of whoſe children he was admitted to be chiefe ſchoolemaiſter and inſtructor.

But ſhortlie after, profeſſing diuine and humane learning in the monaſterie of Malmeſburie, to all ſuch as would come to his lecture, he was by certeine ſcholers of his (whoſe pride and euill conditions he did ſharpelie rebuke, wounded & killed pitifullie with Pugionibus, as ſaith Leſleus. Which John, the king of England (as I ſuppoſe) by the authoritie of the pope, procured to be numbred amongſt the martyrs of Chriſt, ordeining a notable monument to be erected ouer him in the ſame monaſterie: of whoſe writings and doings thus writeth Geſnerus in theſe words: Ioannes Mailroſius cognomine & natione Scotus, Alcuini ſocius, ſcripſit ſuper canones Aizachelis lib. 1. Ad Carolũ regẽ lib. 1. Verſus diuerſi generis lib. 1. In euangel. Mat. lib. 3. De officijs humanis lib. 8. De officijs diuinis lib. 1. Dialogum de natura lib. 1. De naturæ diuiſione lib. 1. De primo rerũ principio lib. 1. De euchariſtia lib. 1. Commentaria ſcripturarum lib. 1. Homilias eruditas lib. 1. De German. iuxta Irenium lib. 1. Claruit anno 792, Baleus. Idem libros Dionyſij Areopagitæ in Latinam linguam tranſtulit. Carmen eius ad Carolum magnum extat apud M. Dreſſ.

Kennethus king of Scots. Kennethus king of Scots, who died in the yeare of Chriſt eight hundred fiftie & fiue, wrote a booke of godlie lawes which are expreſſed by Leſleus lib. 1. pag. 75. of whome thus writeth Geſnerus: Kenethus Scotorum rex, Alcuini regis filius, ſcripſit Breuiarium antiquarum legum, quibus in foris per Angliam iuriſconſulti vtuntur. But in that Geſner is deceiued; for we neuer read (as far as my memorie ſerueth) that euer the Engliſh borrowed lawes of the Scots; but contrarie, the Scots haue borrowed, & béene inforced to obeie the lawes of England, as receiuing them from the kings of this land, their ſuperior lords: to whome they haue done their homage, although time hath now worne the ſame out of vſe.

Claudius Clemens. Claudius Clemens, by birth a Scot & a monke, being the diſciple of Bede, was companion to Albinus or Alcuinus, as ſaith Sixtus Senenſis in bibliotheca ſancta: he was verie ſtudious in the ſcriptures, & skilfull in other humane knowleges, who liuing in the time of Charlemaine, in the yeare of Chriſt eight hundred, and eight hundred and ten, did in verſe and proſe write manie learned workes, whereof theſe are knowne to be his: In pentateuchum lib. 5. In Ioſua lib. 1. In Iudicum lib. 1. In Ruth lib. 1. In pſalterium. In Matthæum lib. 1. In Paulum ad Galatas. De euangeliſtarum concordia. Contra Bonifacium Anglum, & alia multa.

Beornillus. Beornillus biſhop of the Scots, of whome thus writeth Parker in his booke of the liues of the archbiſhops of Canturburie: Beornillus Scotorum epiſcopus acerrimus verborum & ſententiarum aculeis carmine ſcriptis, monachorum turbam laceſſiuit: which Beornillus was alſo at the councell of Calne in Wiltſhire in England, about the yeare of Chriſt nine hundred three ſcore and ſeuentéene. For Alfritha the quæne procured Alfrith or Alfred earle of Mercia in England, that he ſhould labor to haue this Beornill to be preſent there, which this biſhop Beornill did performe, and behementlie ſpake in defenſe of the ſecular prieſts, againſt the placing of monks in their romes.

Leuinus

Leuinus. Leuinus archbiſhop of the Scots, being martyred, and ſo termed a martyr, is ſuppoſed to haue written certeine homilies; he flouriſhed as hath Geſnerus out of Bale, in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand and ſeuen, vnder the gouernment of Grime and Malcolme (the ſecond) kings of Scots.

Malcolme. Malcolme the ſecond of that name king of Scots, who began his reigne in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand and ten, and reigned thirtie yeares, departing the world in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand and fortie, did write of his countrie lawes, Lib. 1. being at length ſlaine by his owne courtiers.

Marianus Scotus. Marianus Scotus ſo called, becauſe that he was borne in Scotland, was a monke of the order Benedictine, who when he perceiued all the realme of Scotland to be kindeled with continuall and ciuill hatred in the time of the tyrant Mackbeth, beginning his reigne in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand fortie and ſir, he forſooke his countrie, and firſt came vnto the monaſterie of Hulda in Germanie; where for a time he continued vnder Richard the abbat (a Scot, no leſſe famous for his godlineſſe, than for his learning) which at the time of his comming thither, had the gouernment of the ſame abbeie. After which, Marianus went to Mentz, and paſſing ouer a ſolitarie life by the ſpace of thirtie yeares, in an opinion of all men for his vertue, he ſhortlie after died, who (flouriſhing vnder the ſaid tyrant Macketh, & Malcolme the third of that name king of Scots) did leaue behind him theſe works of his: Chronica ab initio mundi vſque ad ſua tempora lib. 3. De concordantia euangeliſtarum lib. 1. De computo lib. 1. Emendationes Dionyſij. Annotationes ſcripturarum. De cyclo paſchali Algorithmum. Breuiarium in Lucam. Epiſtolas hortatorias, obijt Moguntiæ, anno Dom. 1086.

Turgotus. Turgotus by Geſner called deane of Durham, and by our chronicles called prior of that houſe, was a verie vertuous perſon, and after created biſhop of ſaint Andrewes, who being in life in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand foureſcore and ſirteene, in the time of Malcolme the third, ſurnamed Camoir, or with the great head king of Scots, did write De Scotorũ regibus lib. 1. Chronica Dunelmenſia lib. 1. Annales ſui temporis lib. 1. Vitam Malcolmi regis, & vitam Margaretæ Angliæ reginæ. In which Geſner hath miſtaken himſelfe, for there was not anie Margaret quéene of England manie hundred yeres after this Turgotus, vntill the latter time of king Edward the firſt. Wherefore it ſhould rather be the life of ſaint Margaret quéene of Scotland, and the wife of that Malcolme.

David Scotus. David Scotus, of whom Geſner maketh two diſtinct writers one after another, firſt ſetting downe David Scotus, and next David Preſbyter Scotus, this man being borne in Scotland, was firſt ſchoolemaiſter at Wiceburgh, who being after called into the court by Henrie the fift the emperor, of whom Auentinus abbas Vrſpengenſis & manie others do write, was after made biſhop of Bangor in Wales. This man writing the diſcourſe of the iourneie which the emperor Henrie the fift made into Italie after the pacification had betweene him and the pope about the inueſtiture of biſhops, did occaſion William of Malmſburie to ſaie thus much of him in his firſt booke De regibus. At verò Henricus antiquis Cęſaribus in nulla virtute deiectior, poſt pacatum regnum Theutonicum præſumebat animo Italicum; rebellionem vrbium ſubiugaturus, quæſtionémque de inueſtitura ſuo libito reciſſurus; ſed iter illud ad Roman magnis excercitationibus peccatorum magnis angoribus corporũ conſummatũ, Dauid Scotus Banchorẽſis epiſcopus expoſuit, magis in regis gratiam quàm hiſtoricum deceret accliuis. He liued and proſpered about the yeare of our Lord one thouſand one hundred and ten in the times of Edgar and Alexander (the firſt) kings of Scotland, & did write Henrici imperatoris in Italiam expeditionem lib. 1. Magiſtratuum inſignia lib. 1. Apologiam ad Cæſarem de regno Scotiæ lib. 1.

Richardus de ſancto victore. Richardus de ſancto Victore (of whom I do not as yet find anie mention in Geſner, but in Iohn Maior and Leſleus) liued in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand one hundred twentie and foure, vnder Dauid the firſt king of Scotland, who being a religious perſon of the order of ſaint Auguſtine, and not inferior vnto anie diuine of his time, aſwell in ſcholaſticall as other diuinitie, did ſet forth manie works to be read, & was buried in the cloiſter of ſaint Victor in Paris, whoſe monument is yet to be ſeene with this epitaph recited by Iohn Maior in his memoriall:

Moribus, ingenio, doctrina clarus & arte,
Puluereo hic tegeris docte Richarde ſitu:
Quem tellus genuit felici Scotica partu,
Te fouet in gremio Gallica terra ſuo.
Nil tibi parca ferox nocuit, nec ſtamina paruo
Tempore tracta graui rupit acerba manu:
Plurima námque tui ſuperant monumenta laboris,
Quæ tibi perpetuum ſunt paritura decus.
Segnior vt lento ſceleratas mors petit edes,
Sic propero nimis it ſub pia tecta gradu.

Walter the baſtard ſonne of king Dauid the firſt. Walter the baſtard ſonne of Dauid the firſt of that name king of Scots by a widow ſometime the wife of one Walter a Scot, was ſo far eſtranged from the vaine things of this world, that from his youth he was (as ſaith Leſleus lib. 6. pag. 223.) wholie conſecrat to holie exerciſes and offices, being firſt indued with the rich canonrie of ſaint Oſwald, and after with the honorable priorie of Kirkham. But he rightlie conſidering with himſelfe that there was nothing which did more weaken the force of vertue than riches and idleneſſe, did refuſe the archbiſhoprike of ſaint Andrewes, and cloſed himſelfe in a monaſterie, where he remained vntill he was aduanced to be abbat of Melroſſe, wherevnto being ſo preferred, he was the author and occaſion that Malcolme (the fourth of that name king of Scots, ſurnamed the virgin) laied the foundation of manie abbeies. This man made commentaries vpon the booke intituled the Eccleſiaſticall rule, and at length being famous through manie miracles (as that age did ſimplie ſuppoſe) he was inſtalled amongſt the number of the ſaints, and flouriſhed vnder the ſame king Malcolme, which began his reigne in the yeare of our redemption one thouſand one hundred fiftie and three, which Walter I ſuppoſe to be the ſame man of whom Geſnerus writeth in this ſort: Gualterus Albanenſis monachus ſcripſit de libris eccleſiæ lib. 1. claruit anno Domini 1180. Baleus.

Thomas Liermant alias Erſilton. Thomas Liermant alias Erſilton being borne in Scotland, was had amongſt the common people in great admiration, who not being greatlie learned did by a certeine diuination (as though Apollo had ſpoken from the curteine) foretell things to come, but with what ſpirit we will not iudge, whoſe words obteined the more authoritie and credit, becauſe he had foretold the fatall date of the death of Alexander the third king of Scots, which loſt his life in the yeare one thouſand two hundred foureſcore and three. He wrot Prædictiones rerum Scoticarum rithmicis verſibus, ſpeaking moſt commonlie alſo in rime, and was therefore by the Engliſh ſurnamed Rithmicus, or the Rimer, liuing ſome yeares after the death of Alexander the third, for Geſner maketh him to floriſh in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred foureſcore and ſir.

Michael

Michaell Medicus. Michaell Medicus, being a learned man in all philoſophie, aſtronomie, and the other mathematiks, whereby he grew in admiration amongſt the people, is twiſe mentioned by Geſner, a fault which I manie times find in his Bibliotheca, firſt pag. 607, by the name Michael Mathematicus cognomine Scotus, who flouriſhed in the time of John Baliol king of Scots, and in the yeare of Chriſt 1290, being an old man, he wrote In gratiã Frederici 2. imperatoris. De ſphera lib. 1. In Ariſtotelis meteora lib. 4. De conſtitutione mundi lib. 4. De anima lib. 1. De cœlo & mundo lib. 2. De ſomno & vigilia lib. 2. De generatione & corruptione lib. 2. De ſubſtãtia orbis lib. 1. De ſenſu & ſenſato lib. 2. De memoria & reminiſcentia lib. 2. Contra Auerroem in meteora lib. 1. Imagines aſtronomicas lib. 2. Aſtrologorum dogmata lib. 1. In ethica Ariſtotelis lib. 10. De ſignis planetarum lib. 1. De chiromantia lib. 1. De phyſiognomia lib. 1. Abbreuiationes Auicennæ lib. 1. De animalibus ad Cæſarem lib. 1. whoſe booke of phyſnomie was printed at Uenice Anno Dom. 1503. by John Baptiſta Sella.

John Duns. John Duns by ſome called Iohannes Scotus, and tearmed the ſubtill doctor, was ſo ſurnamed Duns of the towne of Duns, eight miles from England, who (when he was yet but a boie) was by two frier minors brought into England to Oxford, there to be inſtructed: for at that time nor long after was there not anie vniuerſitie in Scotland. By means of which two friers he was placed in a houſe of their profeſſion, in which this Duns at length toke the habit and order of the Franciſcans, prouing of a moſt ſingular wit, whereby he became a ſharpe and ſubtill diſputer, who departing from Oxford, went to Paris, being called thither by the frier minors, where when he had for ſome ſpace remained, and read vnto them of ſcholaſticall matters, he trauelo to Cullen, and there vntimelie died in his youthfull yeares. He liued in the time of John Baliol king of Scots, which began his reigne in the yeare of Chriſt 1283. of which Duns all they which follow his opinions are (as ſaith Leſleus lib. 7. pag. 250) called Scotiſtæ or Scotiſts as all they of an other faction are ſurnamed Thomiſtæ or the Thomiſts, after Thomas Aquinas. But now in our age it is growne to be a common prouerbe in deriſion, to call ſuch a perſon as is ſenſeleſſe or without learning a Duns, which is as much as a fole: although trulie the ſame cannot ſtand with anie reaſon, this man Duns being ſo famous for his learning as he was, who wrote manie volumes as after ſhall appeare. But before I come to him, I thinke it not vnfit to ſet downe what other haue written touching him, ſith both the Engliſh, the Iriſh, and the Scots, do chalenge him to be their countriman, borne amongſt them. Thus therefore writeth Stanihurſt in his deſcription of Ireland vnder the title of the Iriſh writers. Iohannes Duns Scotus an Iriſhman borne, as in the forefront of this treatiſe I haue declared. Howbeit Iohannes Maior a Scotiſh chronicler lib. 4. cap. 16. would faine prooue him to be a Scot. Leland on the other ſide ſaith, that he was borne in England. So that there ſhall be as great contention riſe of him as in old time there roſe of Homers countrie, for the Colophonians ſaid that Homer was borne in their citie, the Chyians claimed him to be theirs: the Salaminians auouched that he was their countriman. But the Smirnians were ſo ſtiffelie bent in prouing him to be borne in their territorie, as they would at no hand take no naie in the matter, and thereupon they did conſecrate a church to the name of Homer. But what countriman ſo euer this Scotus were, he was doubtleſſe a ſubtill and profound clearke. The onelie fault wherewith he was dulled, was a little ſpice of vainglorie, being giuen to carpe and tawnt his predeceſſor diuines, rather for blemiſhing the fame of his aduerſaries, than for aduanſing the truth of the controuerſies. Thus much Stanihurſt. Now the bookes which he wrote were theſe. Super ſententias lib. 4. Quodlibeta quoque lib. 1. Sermones de ſanctis lib. 4. Sermones de tempore li. 1. De cognitione Dei lib. 1. Cõmentarios Oxonienſes lib. 4. Reportationes Pariſienſes lib. 4. In metaphyſicã quæſtionẽ lib. 12. Quæſtiones vniuerſaliũ li. 2. Quæſtiones prædicamẽtorũ lib. 1. In analytica poſteriora lib. 1. In Ariſtotelis phyſica lib. 8. In Categorias eiuſdem lib. 1. Lecturam in Geneſim lib. 1. De rerum principio lib. 1. Commentaria in euangelia lib. 4. In epiſtolas Pauli. Collectiones Pariſienſes. Tetragrãmatum lib. 1. & alia. Claruit Anno Dom. 1308. Of whoſe workes thus further writeth Geſn. Iohanni Scoto ſententiarum interpreti primæuam ſacratiſſimi Dionyſij tranſlationem aſcribunt, cùm alteri cuidam Iohanni Scoto (before named, and liuing about the yeare of Chriſt eight hundred ninetie & two, about three hundred yeares before this Duns) Qui iſtũ multis ſæculis anteceſſit, & Athænis Græcè didicit, accepta referri debeat. Of the death of this man ſæ Petrus Crinitus lib. 24. cap. 11. De honeſta vita, where he affirmeth that this Duns did turne the hierarchie of S. Denis ont of Græke into Latine.

Thomas Uarreie. Thomas Uarreie or Uarraie flouriſhed at the battell of Otterburne, which was in the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand three hundred eighтie and eight, in the time of Robert the ſecond of that name king of Scots, at what time the Engliſh were put to the worſt. This man vpon this victorie did compoſe manie things in Latine rime beginning in this ſort:

Muſa refert fatum fore ſcriptum carmine vatum, &c.

Who being maiſter and ruler of Bethwallie, is not greatlie eſteemed of the Scotiſh hiſtoriographers. Geſnerus referreth the time wherein he liued, to the yeare of Chriſt one thouſand two hundred and ninetie, which is almoſt a hundred yeares before that, in which the hiſtories of Scotland make anie mention of him.

William Elphinſtone. William Elphinſtone being borne in Scotland was a great learned man, but becauſe I do find one hundred and fortie yeares difference touching the time wherein he liued, ſet downe within three or foure lines the one of the other by Geſnerus, I will ſaie nothing of him, but onelie verbatim ſet downe the words of the ſame author in this ſort. Gulielmus Elphinſton natione Scotus, Albonenſis epiſcopus, ſcripſit antiquitates Scotorum, & conciliorum ſtatuta librum vnum. Claruit anno Domini 1480. Laudat hunc valdè Boſtonus Burienſis in magno ſcriptorum catalogo, ob ſingularem eruditionem. Vixit circa annum 1340. Thus much Geſnerus.

James Steward. James Steward the firſt of the name of James, being brought vp in England as a perſon eſtranged from his native ſoile, is by Geſnerus ſaid to haue bẽne by ſome called Robert the third, which can not be ſo; for he that was ſo named was John Steward, and not James. This man in the time whileſt he remained in England, being a kind of baniſhment from his owne countrie, did compoſe one booke of verſes, and manie other ſongs, he being both a learned diuine, philoſopher, and muſician, who was in the end ſlaine of his owne people, in the thirteenth yeare of his reigne, falling in the yeare of our Lord God one thouſand foure hundred thirtie and ſir.

Johannes Maior. Johannes Maior borne in Scotland, whom Sixtus Senenſis in his Bibliotheca ſancta doth (not rightlie) call an Engliſhman, was brought vp in Oxford, where atteining to ſufficient learning, he went into France for the obteining further knowledge ledge, and applied his studie in Paris, where he followed and professed diuinitie, as appeared by his owne workes. He was borne at Hadington in Scotland, as appeareth by Gesnerus, of whome he is named Iohannes Maior Hadingtonensis, he did write Decisiones sententiarum lib. 4. Sophisticalia Parisiensia, Placita theologica, Commentarios in Matthæum, Historiarum maioris Britanniæ lib. 6. Caxtonum Anglum transtulit lib. 7. He florished at Paris, as hath Gesnerus, in the yeare of Grace one thousand fiue hundred & twentie, vnder James the fift king of Scots, vnto whome he dedicated his storie of Britaine, conteining England and Scotland. There is one John Maior vouched and alledged in Crispasso Ioan. Eccij, which I do take to be this man. And Sixtus Senensis in his Bibliotheca sancta amongst the writers of the bible doth speake of one John Maior in this manner: Iohannes Maior Anglus scripsit in quatuor euangelia scholastica postillam, and liued in the yeare of Christ one thousand and foure hundred, being an hundred and twentie yeares before the time appointed by others, and by Maior himselfe wherein he should liue. Of which Maior Buchanan hath verie scoffinglie set downe these foure verses here vnder written as followeth:

Cùm scateat nugis solo cognomine Maior,
Nec sit in immenso pagina sana libro,
Non mirum titulis quòd se veracibus ornat,
Nec semper mendax fingere Creta solet.

William Gregorie. William Gregorie borne in Scotland, and student in Paris, where he professed diuinitie, did liue, as saith Bibliotheca sancta, in the yeare of Christ one thousand fiue hundred and seuentæne, and also, as hath Bibliotheca Gesneri in the yeare of our Lord one thousand fiue hundred twentie and seuen. He left manie bookes behind him which he had carefullie and learnedlie written, whereof these are the titles: De duplici potestate lib. 1. Elucidationes sententiarum lib. 4. Quæstiones vesperales lib. 1. In politica Aristotelis lib. 8. De triplici animæ potentia lib. 1. De regno Christi æterno lib. 1. De triplici principatu lib. 1. De scripturæ sensibus lib. 3. Ad vocabulare theologicũ lib. 1. Collectiones Sorbonicas lib. 1. De disciplina Iuniorum lib. 1. De sacra synaxi lib. 1. In psalterium commentarios lib. 1. Sermones in euangelia & epistolas per circuitum lib. 2.

Hector Boetius. Hector Boetius of Dundée in Scotland, was a learned and an eloquent historiographer, whose stile in manie parts goeth beyond the truth of times, places, and persons in his Scotish historie. He florished in the yeare of Christ one thousand three hundred twentie and six, vnder James the fift king of Scots, of whome I will saie no more, but set downe Gesnerus words: Hector Boetius Deidonatus, natione Scotus, scripsit catalogum regum Scotiæ. Descriptiones eiusdem regni lib. 1. Historias Scotorum lib. 17. Aberdonensium pontificum vitas, eius historiæ Scotorum excusæ sunt Parisijs, anno 1556: earundem historiarum à prima gentis origine cum aliarum & rerum & gentium illustratione non vulgari lib. 19. Duo postremi huius historiæ libri nunc primum emittuntur in lucem. Accessit & huic æditioni eiusdem Scotorum historiæ continuatio per Ioannem Ferrerium Pedæmontanum recens & ipsa scripta & edita fol. Parisijs apud Iacobum Dupuys 1580.

Gawine Dowglasse. Gawine Dowglasse, borne of the noble house of the Dowglasses in Scotland, being of a rare wit and learning, was made bishop of Dunkeld; who for contention betweene him and the gouernor of Scotland, forsoke his countrie and fled into England, where he died at London, in the yeere of Christ one thousand fiue hundred twentie and one, in the time of James the fift of that name king of Scots, who in his life time did write Palatium honoris lib. 1. Aureas narrationes lib. 1. Comœdias aliquot lib. 1. De rebus Scoticis lib. 1. Transtulit in patrium sermonem Aeneidos Virgilij lib. 12.

Dauid Lindsete of the mount or hill, otherwise by his office of principall herald of the realme of Scotland, surnamed Lion, was both a knight and a learned person, as may appeare by his workes written in his owne tong in verse, which were Acta sui temporis lib. 1. De mundi miserijs lib. 1. Tragœdia Dauidis Beton lib. 1. Testamentum cardinalis Beton lib. 1. as hath Gesnerus (if that booke and the tragedie of Dauid Beton cardinall be not all one) Testamentum psitaci lib. 1. Dialogus aulici & experientiæ lib. 1. Somnium Dauidis Lindsei lib. 1. Deploratio mortis reginæ Magdalenæ lib. 1. Of most of which his workes Gesnerus maketh no mention, although that he affirme that he florished in the yeare of Grace one thousand fiue hundred and fortie, in the time of James the fift king of Scotland, with whome in his youth this Lindsete was brought vp, and whome he after painfullie serued in the court.

Patrike Hamilton. Patrike Hamilton, borne of the noble familie of the Hamiltons, being the nephue of the earle of Arrane by his brother, was (as saith Lesleus lib. 9. pag. 427) Abbas Fenensis, who hauing applied his time in studie in Germanie, and followed the doctrine of Luther, did returne into Scotland, was after by the bishops condemned for an heretike, and burned in the yeare of our Lord God one thousand fiue hundred twentie and eight, as haue Gesnerus and Bale in the time of James the fift of that name king of Scots. He wrote diuerse bookes, amongst which were these, De lege & euangelio lib. 1. De fide & operibus lib. 1.

Iohannes Altus. Iohannes Altus, so called by Gesner, being a Scot borne, had some contention with one Eusdan Worchet, to whome he did write in verse a sharpe and rebuking apologie which conteined one booke; besides which also he did write another booke Contra Antiscotiton of this Worchet, & Epigrammata lib. 1. He liued in the yeare of Christ one thousand fiue hundred and thirtie vnder James the fift.

John Bellendon. John Bellendon or Ballentine, who florished in the yeare of Christ one thousand fiue hundred thirtie and six, vnder king James the fift, translated Hector Boetius out of Latine into Scotish and English, and wrote the description of Albanie or Scotland.

John Wouran being a canon regular, hauing applied himselfe to the studie of diuinitie, wherein he much profited, did write in his owne language Catechismum fidei lib. 1. and liued in the yeare of our redemption one thousand fiue hundred fortie and six, and in the fourth yere of the reigne of Marie quæne of Scots.

John Herrison. John Herrison a Scot, liuing in the yere of our saluation one thousand fiue hundred fortie and eight, being the first yeere of Marie quæne of Scots, did applie his time in the studie of diuinitie, and wrote, De amplectanda in christiana religione concordia lib. 1. which was written to Edward Seimor duke of Summerset protector of England.

flesh one thousand fiue hundred fiftie and eight, being the sixteenth yéere of the reigne of Marie quéene of Scots. This man, whome Gesnerus supposeth might fortune to be the same John Makleth before touched, did write Anglorum ecclesiæ originem & progressum lib. 1. Explicationem suæ fidei lib. 1.

George Buchanan. George Bucchanan an Irish Scot, greatlie learned, but manie times malicioustie affected, and that so vehementlie, as that he would not forbeare in the highest degrée of malice to vpbraid and backebite euerie person and nation which had offended him, as maie appeare by his immodest spéeches, not beséeming a man of his learning, was schoolemaster to James the sixt of that name king of Scotland, of whom liuing in the yeare of Christ one thousand fiue hundred three score and nineténe, I will forbeare to saie what I could, least I might offend in that which I mislike in him, & therfore will onlie set down what Gesner hath written of him. Georgius Buchananus Scotus rudimenta grãmatices Latinæ Thomæ Linacri ex Anglico sermone in Latinum vertit: ea Nicol. Brilingerus impressit Basiliæ anno 1542. extant eius & elegantissima poemata: Iephtes tragœdia, Lutetiæ apud Vascosanum. De iure regni apud Scotos editio secunda, Edinburgi 1580. Psalmi Dauidis ab eodem versibus expressi nunc primùm modulis 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, vocum a I. Seruino decantati 4 Lugduni 1580. Ad euangelii professores lib. 2. Qualiter sit orandum lib. 1. Contra missam papisticam lib. 1. Doctrina missalium lib. 1. De fide eucharistiæ epistola 1. Ad ecclesias afflictas epis. 1. Ad Scotiæ reginam Mariam epist. 1. Concilium in his angustiis epist. 1. Buccinæ afflatum primum lib. 1. Appellationem a sentẽtia cleri lib. 1. Ad populares Scotiæ librũ vnum. He liued in the yere of Christ 1569.

John Durie. Iohannes Duræus or Durie, whom Gesner calleth Bureus, being borne in Dumfermling, and the son before he was abbat of the abbat of Dumfermling brother to the lord of Duries, was brought vp in Paris and Louan, after which he became a priest, and then a Iesuit, who now liuing did in the yere of Christ one thousand fiue hundred foure score and foure, write a booke which was intituled Confutatio responsionis Iohannis Whitakeri, ad rationes decem quibus fretus Edmundus Campianus Anglus Iesuita certamen Anglicanæ ecclesiæ ministris obtulit in causa fidei: which booke was printed at Paris in 8 by Thomas Brunelius, In clauso Brunello sub signo oliuæ.

Patrike Adamson. Patrike Adamson liuing in the yeare of Christ one thousand fiue hundred three score and thirténe, did write certeine verses, whereof this was the title and effect, as hath Gesnerus, Patricii Adamsoni gratiarum actio illustriss. & potentiss. principi Elizabethæ Angl. Franc. & Hiberniæ reginæ, propter liberatam ciuili seditione Scotiam, & redactam munitissimam Edenburgi arcem sub fidem regis carmen elegiacum, which man being now liuing, is archbishop of saint Andrews.

Patrike Cockburne. Patrike Cockburne borne in Scotland, and flourishing in the yeare of Christ one thousand fiue hundred & fiftie, in the time of Marie quéene of Scots, did write, De vtilitate & excellentia verbi Dei, which was printed at Paris by Michaell Fezandate, and Robert Grauson, in the yeare of our Lord one thousand fiue hundred fiftie and one. He writ also De vulgari sacræ scripturæ phrasi, lib. 2. whereof the first doth intreat of the sinne against the Holie-ghost, which they call irremittable or vnto death: the second booke doth with great diligence and fidelitie vnfold the most hard and most obscure places of both the testaments, hitherto by manie euillie vnderstood, and worse interpreted: which worke was printed at Paris by Robert Wessiline in the yere of our Lord one thousand fiue hundred fiftie and two in 8 chart. 13.

Ninianus Wenzetus. Ninianus Wenzetus, who flourished in the yere of our Lord one thousand fiue hundred three score and one, in the time of Marie quæne of Scots, was a fauorer of the popes doctrine, and enimie to John Knokes, touching whom I will set down the words of two seuerall authors, whereof the one is Lesleus a Scot, and the popes and his friend, and the other is Bibliotheca Gesneri, whereof the first saith: Hæc res (which was a disputation in religion) Niniano Winzeto maximam apud hæreticos inuidiam conflauit, vnde cum audirent illum (Ninian Winzet) iam apud typographum calere in libro excudendo, quo cogitarat cum Knoxio de fide violata ad nobilitatem expostulare, consilium ineunt de opere disturbando, Winzeto capiendo, typographo mulctando. Magistratus cum satellitibus irruit in typographiam, libros quos reperit, aufert, Iohan. Scotũ typographũ bonis mulctatum in carcerem abripit: sed Winzetum, quẽ tantopere cupiebant, præ foribus magistratui occurrentem quòd incognitus elapsus fuerat, dolent hæretici, rident Catholici. On the other side thus writeth Bibliotheca Gesneri: Ninianus Winzetus Renfrous, S. theologiæ doctor, & apud sancti Iacobi apud Scotos Ratisponæ, abbas flagellum sectariorum qui religionis prætextu iam in Cæsarẽ aut in alios orthodoxos principes excitare student, quærentes ineptissimè quidem, Deo ne magis an principibus sit obediendũ. Accessit velitatio in Georg. Bucchan. circa dialogũ, quem scripsit de iure regni apud Scotos 4. Ingolstadii ex officina typographica Dauidis Sartorii, an. 1581.

Adam Blackwood. Adam Blackwood borne in Scotland in Dumfermeling, was brought vp in Paris, where atteining to manie degrées of learning, is now liuing, being aduanced to the place of one of the chiefe counsellors of Poitiers. This man hath learnedlie written manie works, amongst which are his bookes De coniunctione religionis & imperii, Funebres orationes admeralli regni Franciæ, & Iacobi Stuarti primi regentis (after that Charles James the sixt, atteined to the crowne) Scotiæ. Besides which hauing written against the work of Buchanan intituled De iure regni, he is now in hand with a booke which he writeth against the chronicle of the same Buchanan.

land, and one who came hither into England with the earls of Angus and Mar, about the yeare of our Lord one thouſand fiue hundred fourſcore and foure, hath written manie epigrams, and amongſt the reſt, one inuectiue againſt the quéene mother, to the king of France, which beginneth Vipera cum catulis.

James Tirie. James Tirie did (as hath Leſleus lib.10.pag.587) go to Rome, after which he became a companion of the Jeſuits, who comming to Paris, trauelled by writing with his elder brother being a baron, to forſake the doctrine of Caluin; he flouriſhed in the yeare of our Lord one thouſand fiue hundred threéſcore and one, vnder Marie quéene of Scots, and did write Ad fratrem epiſtola 1. Reſponſio ad Knoxium lib.1.

Charles James. Charles James the firſt of that name king of Scots now liuing, a toward yong prince, and one well furniſhed with the gifts of nature and learning by birth and inſtruction, did in his yongeſt yeares about the age of seuenténe or eighténe, write a booke of verſes in his mother tong, conteining manie matters of ſundrie rare inuentions, and of ſundrie forme of verſes both learned and eloquent, which booke was after publiſhed to the world; whom I haue here placed the laſt in this catalog of Scotiſh writers, to the end that I would cloſe vp the ſame title with no leſſe honorable and rare perſon, than I firſt made entrance thereinto: and therefore beginning with a king, I thought good alſo to knit it vp with a king.

Thus setting end to my trauels touching Scotland (which I haue not performed as the maieſtie of an hiſtorie requireth, but as my ſkill, helps, & intelligences would permit) I deſire the reader to take it in good part, remembring that Vltra poſſe non eſt eſſe, ſith according to our old prouerbe, A man cannot pipe without his vpper lip. For being denied furtherance (as in the beginning I ſaid) both of the Scots & other of mine owne nation, and thereby not hauing anie more ſubiect wherevpon to worke, I can do no more than ſet downe ſuch things as come to my knowledge. And therefore contenting my ſelfe with this, that In magnis voluiſſe ſat eſt; I commit my ſelfe and my labors to thy fauorable iudgement, who meaſuring my meaning with the square of indifferencie, and pardoning all imperfections in theſe my firſt labors, in reſpect of the ſhortneſſe of time to performe the ſame (for I proteſt to thee that both the hiſtorie of England and Scotland were halfe printed before I ſet pen to paper to enter into the augmentation or continuation of anie of them, as by the inſerting of thoſe things which I haue done maie well appeare) thou ſhalt incourage me hereafter vpon more leſure, and better ſtudie, to deliuer to the world rare matters of antiquitie, and ſuch other labors of mine (Abſit verbis philautia) as maie both ſhew the diſcharge of my dutie to God, to my countrie, to my prince, and to my frends. For though I maie ſéeme to be idle, yet I ſaie with Scipio, Nunquàm minùs ſum otioſus quàm cùm ſum otioſus.

Poſt tenebras lucem, ſed nondum hora.
